Special to The Commercial Appeal

SUMNER, Miss., Jan. 14.—Educational history will be made here Wednesday when the brand new $400,000 West Tallahatchie District High School for Negroes is dedicated.

Gov. J. P. Coleman Wednesday afternoon will deliver the principal address of the dedication. Additional talks will be made by local and state school authorities.

The official opening of the Negro high school marks the culmination of an overwhelming task in Tallahatchie county for the betterment of education for Negroes.

1,355 Enrolled

Less than a year ago, 40 schools, most substandard, in West Tallahatchie attempted to serve the educational needs of the Negro.

The new 12-grade school, which has been in operation since September, has a total enrollment of 1,355 students from the West Tallahatchie District. It is served by an all Negro staff of 32 headed by R. H. Beardon as Principal.

Professor Bearden, who holds a master's degree, was born and reared in Tallahatchie County. He is assisted by Frank H. Reed, assistant principal, who is from Clarksdale.

Open House Set

The dedication ceremonies will comprise most of Wednesday morning and a portion of Wednesday afternoon.

Dedication day will begin with an open house at 9 a.m. followed by an assembly in the high school auditorium. The main speaker of the morning will be A. A. Alexander, assistant state supervisor of Negro education.

Music for both the morning and afternoon program will be provided by the Mississippi Vocational College band, the Allen Carver band, and the Coahoma Junior College band.

During the afternoon session which commences at 2, talks prior to the main address by Governor Coleman will be given by Professor Bearden and Gycell Tynes, superintendent of the West Tallahatchie District School.

School Fires Investigated

Reports of on the spot investigations into North Mississippi's half million dollars series of school house fires—four in eight days—were being awaited in the State Fire Marshal's office in Jackson today. A. B. McGraw, deputy fire marshal said.

First report expected is that of Deputy Louie Hopkins, who is now completing his investigation of the $75,000 fire at McEvans High School for Negroes at Shaw a week ago Monday night. Walls of the 40-year old brick building were kept under guard during sub-freezing weather during early phases of Hopkins' investigation.

C. L. Pace, Jackson deputy, has charge of the investigation into cause of the J. Z. George High School fire at Carrollton, Saturday night, resulting in an estimated loss of $250,000 on the two-story brick building and another $8,000 damage to equipment.

He is also assisting Deputy Boyce Erwin, Ackerman, in seeking causes of the Houston Negro High School, less than 24 hours after the Vardaman High school, nine miles away, was destroyed.

The Houston loss is estimated at approximately $150,000, partially covered by insurance. Students are being accommodated in churches and vacant buildings.

SCHOOL FUNDS GRANTED

New Negro Facility Planned At West Point

WEST POINT, Miss., April 13.—The state Education Finance Commission has approved $340,000 for construction of a new Negro junior-senior high school for the West Point Municipal Separate School District.

Supt. B. D. McCallister said the board can now go ahead with building plans and selection of a site.

The new high school is the second of a three part construction program for Negroes in the West Point new school district.

Superintendent said that bids are not expected to be received until this summer. A contract for a new Negro elementary school was let a few weeks ago.

The proposed $340,000 building is to replace the present North Side High School, which will be converted into an elementary school for Negroes, Mr. McCallister said.

Mound Bayou Class Off To Washington

MOUND BAYOU, Miss. (Special)—The Senior Class of the Mound Bayou High School is currently on tour of the Nation's Capital. This is the second such educational venture undertaken by the senior class of Bolivar County School District Number 6.

Points of both educational and social interest have been included and the class will view the House and the Senate while in session.

The class will return to Mound Bayou Saturday. Baccalaureate and Commencement services will be held Sunday, May 18 at 8:30 a. m. and 4:30 p. m. respectively.

Fourth School Fire In Past Eight Days

HOUSTON, Miss. (Special) — The Houston Negro High School went up in flames early today.

The three-story brick building burst into flames about 7:30 a. m. today and fire still enveloped the school at 9 a. m.

The Houston fire is the fourth school fire in Mississippi during the past eight days. The Vardaman High School, nine-miles away; McEvans Negro High School at Shaw, and the J. Z. George High School at North Carrollton were destroyed by fire.

Sid Harris, editor of the Houston Times-Post, said the building would probably be a "total loss."

He estimated it would take between $100,000 and $150,000 to replace the structure.

The school, built about 1928, was only partly covered by insurance, according to Harris.

Origin of the fire had not been determined. The fire broke out before the students arrived for classes.

UNDER CONTROL

The Houston volunteer fire department was combatting the blaze. There was no danger of the fire spreading.

The school is about five blocks from the downtown section of Houston.

Harris said the students will probably attend classes at nearby Negro churches until the end of the school year.

Harris said plans call for a new Negro school under Chickasaw County's reorganization plan which has not been approved.

At Vardaman, fire early yesterday did damage estimated at nearly $300,000 and the state fire marshal's office was reported called in to investigate the blaze. The school was covered with only about $30,000 worth of insurance.

Local school board members met yesterday with the county board and made plans to start rebuilding as soon as practicable.

CLASSES TO RESUME

In the meantime, high school students will begin holding classes tomorrow in the elementary school.

Grade school pupils will attend classes in the Sunday school rooms of the Methodist and Baptist churches.

Possible incendiary motives in the McEvans High School for Negroes fire at Shaw on Feb. 17 and the J. C. George High School fire at Carrollton Saturday were still under investigation by the State Fire Marshal's office today with one for the elementary school, one for the junior high, and have an auditorium - gymnasium, library and administrative offices.

Raymond Birchett of Jackson is the architect on the building project.

A contract for bleachers for the Addison School gymnasium was let to Central School Supply Company of Jackson for a price of $5,155.60. The bid was for 1500 seats.

Four bids on general contract, five on plumbing and heating, and six on wiring were received.

The steel roof construction will support a non-combustible roof deck. Asphalt tile will be used to floor the classroom building, and a hardwood floor will be placed in the gymnasium.

The high school building will have 10 classrooms, a library, food and sewing and science laboratories, principal's office, workroom, conference room, adequate washrooms, and storage space. With a seating capacity of 1,200, the gymnasium will include a stage and dressing rooms.

The buildings will be used in addition to the present school which was erected in 1952. The entire plant will occupy a plot of approximately 15 acres.

The new school will be completed for the 1959-1960 session.

Negro Principal Lauds School Named For Him

CARTHAGE, Miss. (ANP) — A principal of the Negro high school that was called the criticism of the school "utterly ridiculous."

O. E. Jordan, principal of the new Jordan high school, said the school rapped by the NAACP, is "entirely adequate for our present needs. We are very proud of our new school."

In a statement issued at Jackson, the NAACP said, "Anyone who takes the time to make a comparison of the three schools (two white and one Negro) and their costs will observe the shortcomings of the Jordan school as compared with the new elementary schools.

Outraged by the statement, Jordan said, "Until the NAACP has something better to offer us, I think they should shut up. If they want us to have a better school than we now have, we welcome them to make a deposit to our account in the Carthage bank."

The new school was named in his honor.

SCHOOL IN JERSEY FIRED BY VANDALS

Maplewood Junior High Is Closed for Week Because of $300,000 Damage

MAPLEWOOD, N. J., Feb. 3 —Detectives began sifting information tonight to identify youthful vandals who set fire to the Maplewood Junior High School early yestreday.

The vandals, who systematically sacked the school from top to botton:, ignited a trail of kerosene leading to the school library bzefore fleeing from the front entrance. Fire and property damage was estimated at $300,000. The school will be closed for a week.

Four firemen were injured fighting the blaze. One suffered gas poisoning in turning off Bunsen burner gas jets that the invaders had opened.

Detectives today questioned more than a score of teachers and students in an effort to learn of antagonistic or vengeful pupils.

This suburban township is made up largely of middle-income families. tIs ratio of juvenile delinquency is well below that of communities in lower-income levels, but police officials today recalled thefts of auto accessories and lesser offenses by teen-agers in the last year. Vandalism last Jan. 21 in an ice cream parlor here was laid to teen-agers by the police.

The high school is on Baker Street, diagonally across from the Lackawanna Railroad station. The vandals entered through a first-floor window, broke into the administrative offices and scattered report cards that were to have been sent home to parents today.

The invaders also rampaged through the first-floor classrooms and the basement cafeteria. In the second-floor science room the gas jets were opened.

The vandals then obtained four one-gallon cans of kerosene and alcohol from a first-floor art classroom, according to the police, and took it to the school library on tht same floor. There they were said to have scattered hundreds of books on the floor, poured on the flammable liquids, left a trail to the school entrance and fired that before leaving.

The blaze was discovered by passers-by at 1:18 A. M. and firemen, responding to two alarms, brought it under control by 2:50 A. M. The fire wa confined to the southwest wing of the school, which was built in 1929. The original structure was erected fifty-five years ago.

Dr. Herbert McDavit, superintendent of schools of the South Orange-Maplewood District, said it would be necessary to make up the lost time at extra sessions during the spring vacation of April 21 to 25 or at the end of the school term, to fulfill state attendance requirements.

Race Seen Only Part of New York Ills

Is New York trying to "cover up" race friction as the real trouble in its public schools? The United Press brought its Atlanta Bureau manager, a Southerner born and reared, to New York to try to find an objective answer. First of a series.

By Al Kuettner

NEW YORK, Feb. 24 (UP) — The people of New York City have a social problem that equals anything the South faces in that region's agonizing struggle over race relations.

You cannot in honesty find that actual race conflict is causing the rampage of juvenile delinquency in the schools of the Nation's largest city.

You cannot but admit that Negroes, white children and Puerto Ricans get along amiably in their classes.

It's certainly apparent that the administration of Mayor Robert Wagner is determined to make this even more of an "open city" for all races and that he has no serious opposition in his plans.

Race Issue Shares Blame

But there is trouble here, real trouble, and the race issue is at least partly to blame. You find that out by simple arithmetic. The nonwhite population of New York has increased 41 per cent in seven years. For Puerto Ricans, the gain is 97 per cent.

Most of these people live under substandard to poverty conditions. Most of the crimes are committed in these neighborhoods by the inhabitants thereof. Figure it out for yourself.

One of this city's foremost school officials—one, incidentally, who favors continuation of integrated schools—expressed the feeling privately that the Negro leadership is "failing miserably" to improve the moral and social standards of the Negroes.

This factor is one you hear repeatedly in the South—that Negroes are not ready for integration culturally or socially. But it was the first time I had heard it expressed here.

Thousands Have Good Jobs

New York's 910,000 Negroes and 550,000 Puerto Ricans include thousands who have found good jobs and are making a contribution to the city's economy. More than 100 public school teachers, for example, are native Puerto Ricans. The garment industry would be seriously hurt if all the islanders here returned home. The restaurant, entertainment and hotel businesses employ Negro and Puerto Rican workers in droves.

But the other side of the picture is grim.

A considerable area of Metropolitan New York is a ghetto populated by Negroes and Puerto Ricans of low economic status and high reproduction rate.

There is no waiting period for Welfare Department relief in New York. This is a sore point in the minds of taxpayers who object to paying the bills for the care, and later th eucation, of these products of the slums who have migrated here from distant places.

Suspects Exaggeration

Wagner is not one to blame the city's juvenile crime wave—which, incidentally, he feels is exaggerated—on the influx of nonwhite groups. He believes the trouble is due mainly to family breakdown and crowded housing conditions.

He also thinks the city is fortunate to have its huge Negro and Puerto Rican population.

"The size of New York requires that we have a tremendous work force," Wagner said. "In former years, the ethnic groups provided that force—Germans, Poles, Irish. Today most of those have moved up the economic ladder, and I feel we are fortunate that other groups have come to the city to take their places. Now, it happens to be Negroes and Puerto Ricans."

Wagner himself is a product of the New York public school system and grew up in a section where the gangs were fighting. But he, too, moved up the economic scale and now his two sons go to private schools.

I asked him about this in view of some caustic feelings in the South about liberal Northerners who pay only lip service to integration.

Denies Race Influence

He said his youngest son attends parochial school (Wagner is a devout Catholic) and the older boy goes to a private school "which he selected because his friends are there." He insisted it had nothing to do with race problems or the trouble in the New York schools.

William Jansen, New York public school superintendent, attributes the city's much publicized school problems to the theory that "New York has more of the best and more of the worst because it just has more of everybody."

Jansen and his assistant, Clare C. Baldwin, are in charge of the education of almost one million children. Both men deny that the integration of races is a deterrent to good education.

"Negroes go through the top of the IQ (intelligence quotient) tests and they go through the bottom—just like every other group," Jansen said.

"New York is no different from any other city. Our areas of low economic standards produce most of our crime and most of our school delinquency. But we have found that retardation among those in similar economic status, regardless of race, is almost identical."

New York is trying to do something about its child delinquency problem. Right now, to the tune of $4.5 million, a highly efficient city Youth Board is blanketing the city with rehabilitation programs, contacts with schools, personal help to straying youths.

The second article will appear Wednesday.

Mixing Not Basic Cause Of Violence

Migration Of Puerto Ricans, Negroes To N.Y. Is Blamed

By AL KUETTNER
United Press Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK (UP) — You can't lay this city's school delinquency problems at the doorstep of race prejudice.

Yes, there is race prejudice and trouble in New York, big chunks of it. But it's a breed all its own. It's different from anything in the South, and that's really the first thing that hits you.

There is no escaping the fact that much of the current juvenile delinquency is caused by a massive migration here of southern Negroes and Puerto Ricans. There is now one Negro or Puerto Rican for every five whites in New York.

But don't go comparing this melting pot on the Hudson with Montgomery, Ala., or Atlanta or Little Rock. Your yardstick doesn't have the right measurements.

I came here with this assignment: Try to find out if race friction is the real trouble in the schools.

That "trouble" in recent weeks has seen rape of white school girls by Negroes, stabbings, beatings, lye thrown in a classroom, robberies of children in school corridors, beatings of teachers and the suicide of a junior high school principal who flung himself off a rooftop.

TALKS TO OFFICIALS

I have pounded the pavements of New York for a week. I have talked to city officials and gang members, to school children and teachers, to Negroes in trouble with the law, to white businessmen in Negro districts, to judges and criminals. I have talked with Puerto Ricans and youth workers.

From the teeming, cluttered streets of East Harlem to the lower East Side domains of the inter-racial teen-age gangs and from the bright lights of Times Square to the neat residential streets of Queens, I have put that question about race tensions.

The squarest answer I can reach is about this:

The mixing of the races is not the basic cause. But a huge percentage of the crimes and violence spring from the Negro and Puerto Rican elements because of their economic and social plight. For another thing, there appears to be virtually no race problem in the classrooms.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Is the mixing of Negro and white causing the violence in New York schools? Many Southerners are convinced it is and that the North is trying to cover up. The United Press brought its Atlanta bureau manager, a Southerner born and raised, to New York and told him to try to find an objective answer. First of three dispatches.

those schools that are integrated—and many are not, by the way, because of neighborhood complexities—pupils work side by side regardless of race and seem to get along fine.

Outside the classrooms, on the streets, the racial attitudes branch out like the limbs of a tree.

RACE FRICTION LESSENS

Oddly enough, there appears to be less real race friction among the slum dwellers and street gangs than among those higher on the social scale. This may come as a surprise to the South where tensions seem to mount as the economic level goes down.

The reason is pretty obvious, however, when you get down on the streets with the youngsters. They are fighting a battle for survival—food, a place to sleep and, far from least, someone to love and to be respected by. A fellow who reaches that status on the streets of New York isn't worried much whether those in his gang are Negro, Puerto Rican, Irish, Catholic, Jewish or Fiji islander.

There are Negro gangs doing battle with white gangs and mixed gangs backing up Negro and white gangs. But talk to members and they'll tell you the reason a certain boy was beaten was because he "invaded our neighborhood," not because of his color.

New York's current troubles weren't born yesterday, but in the hectic period following World War II. For the first time, huge crowds of southern Negroes and Puerto Ricans were on the move, caught up in the swirl of the big cities. The Puerto Ricans have been coming into New York at the rate of 1,000 a week.

Headline-Seekers Hit As N.Y. Probe Opened

NEW YORK — (AP) — A mayor's committee of top city and school officials went to work at City Hall last night to draw up a program to cope with crime in the city's schools.

P. 1

The group was appointed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner yesterday after he had met for two hours with school officials at Gracie, Mansion, his official residence.

The calling of the meeting was Wagner's first direct intervention in a crisis which heightened in recent weeks as teen-age violence flared anew in Brooklyn schools. So far this week, the violence has subsided.

The violence touched off a heated controversy between the Board of Education and a Brooklyn grand jury over methods of fighting juvenile crime.

The mayor's committee includes William Peer, the mayor's executive secretary; Dr. William Jansen, superintendent of schools; Deputy Mayor John J. Theobald, who will succeed Jansen in September; former Police Commissioner Francis W. H. Adams, now a member of the Board of Education; Harold F. Hay, secretary to Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education; and G. Garry Sousa, law secretary of the board.

MUM ON MIXING

Peer was asked whether racial integration was discussed at the committee session and he replied that he could not give details.

There have been continuing efforts to give schools a mixed racial character.

Yesterday 13 Negro and white ministers with parishes in and around the predominantly Negro Bedford-Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn, where the incidence of teenage crime has been high, sent a telegram to the mayor in which they deplored that they term "headline-seeking adventurers who would disrupt our school — and who by innuendo are attempting to place a racial connotation on recent unfortunate events in our borough."

The ministers said children of various races and nationalities have been both victims and perpetrators of crimes in the area.

"There is not the slightest evidence," the letter went on, "that these events have been connected in any way with racial tensions."

Goldfarb had blamed his school's troubles on a "transitory community." John Marshall's student body is 45 per cent Negro and 10 per cent Puerto Rican.

FLEXIBILITY URGED FOR HIGH SCHOOLS

Education Parley Agrees on Need of Greater Ease in Adjusting to Change

By LOREN POPE
Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, Nov. 25—One of the great needs of high schools is a speeding of their ability to change, a conference of educators agreed here today.

Middle schools and mobile teachers for a mobile population were suggested in the discussions. Use of paperback textbooks to keep current with changing knowledge was urged. Self-learning for students, year-round work for teachers to keep them up to date and much more educational research were also proposed.

The three-day conference, which ended today, gathered 100 representatives of colleges, educational agencies, and public, private and parochial school systems of the nation. Sponsored by Teachers College, Columbia University, it was held at the Thayer Hotel. It was called to explore the major issues facing secondary education.

Basic Revisions Urged

The conferees agreed that a changing culture had made necessary fundamental revisions in the secondary schools. They agreed that the high school student, instead of being "taught," should be helped into an exploratory kind of self-education, with much personal guidance.

What was learned, it was added, should enable the student "to see the big picture of linkages among all aspects of life and learning."

Dr. John Brooks, director of the New Lincoln School, 31 West 110th Street, New York, proposed that, to serve a mobile population, the schools use the idea of the bookmobile to provide traveling science laboratories and traveling facilities for other phases of instruction.

He suggested that, instead of large school buildings in changing neighborhoods, there be "field houses" tied to an industry or general occupation of the neighborhood. Children, he added, could learn their "three R's" in the course of "field studies" of the industry or occupation.

In another of five conference panels it was proposed that, to promote the mobility of teachers, a reciprocal system of certification be worked out that would be valid in any state and thus permit teachers to move about freely.

Wider Advice Advocated

In the discussions a greater role in research and in service of information was urged for the United States Office of Education to help keep the schools abreast of changing needs.

Knowledge is changing so fast, it was agreed, that new teaching materials and new teacher training methods are imperative.

Dr. Brooks recommended that state departments of educational be prohibited from publishing any teaching materials. It was he who made the proposal that textbooks be paperbacks. If hard-bound textbooks were eliminated, he said, there would be no "great vested financial interest" in outdated teaching materials.

A proposal was offered that the pay of teachers be on a year-round basis. The teachers, under the proposal, would devote the summer months to training or curriculum study or other professional improvement work, this procedure keeping them up to date in their teaching fields.

Hulan Jack, second fro mleft, Manhattan Borough President, visits classroom with school and parents' association officials during tour of High School of Performing Arts. At Mr. Jack's left is William T. Hudtwalker, principal.

Manhattan Borough President Hulan E. Jack visited the High School of Performing Arts yesterday. The school is scheduled to be merged with the High School of Commerce to form the new Lincoln Square High School.

Mr. Jack told newsmen he was "sure the Mayor of the City of New York will be sympathetic to the idea that there will be no loss of identity for the High School of Performing Arts."

"If it is a question of money," he added, "let us make money secondary and the question of culture primary."

Sat. 6-7-58

The Borough President said he was in favor of keeping the school "separate and apart." But he would not say whether he favored a separate building for the school.

Parents of students at the school and notables from show business have opposed the merger. They have charged that it would mean the loss of the school's identity and a probable end to its effectiveness. The school now has 600 students and occupies quarters in an antiquated former elementary school building at 120 West Forty-sixth Street.

The proposed Lincoln Square High School would be built on the site of the High School of Commerce at 155 West Sixty-fifth Street.

Mr. Jack toured the performing arts school for more than an hour. He saw ballet, music and drama classes in operation. He was accompanied by William T. Hudtwalker, principal, and Alvin Cowan, president of the school's parents association.

POLICE SENT TO BROOKLYN IN MIX TIFF

Violence Flares Between Races At Mixed School

Times
P. 21
New York, N.Y.
Sun. 6-8-58

NEW YORK (UPI) — Police were sent to a Brooklyn high school today in an effort to avert further outbreaks of violence between white and Negro students.

Four detectives and four uniformed policemen were assigned to the 3,800-student Franklin Lane High School after a series of gang fights, before and after classes, near the school.

Approximately one-fourth of the student body is Negro.

In addition to the police patrol, teachers were stationed outside the school before classes began in an effort to prevent disturbances.

The violence began Tuesday when two groups battled after school. Thursday police broke off two fights between white and Negro youths, one before school and the other after classes. Sixteen Negro youths were arrested on an elevated railway platform near the school, but police said only four of them were students there.

The school principal, Harry Eisner, said he believes "the situation in Arkansas and Virginia is provoking a feeling of unrest and insecurity" between whites and Negroes.

The arrests Thursday followed a fight aboard a train near Franklin K. Lane High School. Thirteen youths were charged with unlawful assembly and three with juvenile delinquency for violation of a state law probibiting the possession of weapons.

Police said the latter three had a zip gun, knives and a meat cleaver. All 16 were said to be members of a gang called the Greene Avenue Stompers.

Eisener had requested a police guard at the school following a fight Tuesday that involved a dozen pupils. Two were suspended and three were turned over to the police juvenile aid bureau.

Depth from Dixie

During the wave of rapes and stabbings in New York City schools this winter, the South's segregationist dailies pounced jubilantly on the story as a Yankee-sent sermon on the evils of mixing the races in the classroom. When a Brooklyn principal killed himself during a grand jury investigation of violence at his junior high school (TIME, Feb. 19), Mississippi's extremist Jackson Daily News front-paged the story with a picture of a Negro policeman guarding the school. Caption: "Mixed school violence led to this."

The facts did not support such racist conclusions, and despite pressure from Southern editors, the wire services refused to give that slant to their reports on Northern school delinquency. Many Southern editors nonetheless echoed the Montgomery Advertiser's taunt that the real story was being suppressed by "such deluded racists as the New York Times." A widely distributed series of cartoons in the Nashville Banner derided "Mixiecrats" and "Bleeding Hearts," pictured the North's "objective liberal press" as burying delinquency stories on the obituary pages. When newsmen such as the Atlanta Journal's Managing Editor William Ray tried conscientiously to dig deeper by demanding a racial breakdown of the 644 students expelled from New York schools as troublemakers, they ran afoul of school regulations that forbid such identification.

A Place in Society. Last week the Southern editors finally got firsthand coverage of the racial angle in New York's school problem from a first-rate Southern reporter. To cover the story in depth the United Press assigned able, Georgia-born Alfred G. Kuettner, the U.P.'s longtime Atlanta bureau chief. Promised the U.P.'s Executive Editor Harry Ferguson: "If there are any squawks, I'll be your lawyer."

Hard-driving Reporter Kuettner, 44, spent a week prowling the city from the cluttered streets of East Harlem to the seedy side of Brooklyn, talked to school officials and students, white and Negro members of teen-age gangs, storekeepers and social workers, judges and Mayor Robert Wagner. Result: a perceptive, carefully documented three-part series. Reporter Kuettner's conclusion: "You cannot in honesty find that actual racial conflict is causing the rampage of juvenile delinquency. You cannot but admit that Negroes, white children and Puerto Ricans get along amiably in their classes."

Al Kuettner also reported that the racial issue is "at least partly to blame," that Negro and Puerto Rican children cause "a huge percentage of the crime and violence." But, he found, "mixing of the races is not the basic cause." As a tough-minded Brooklyn principal told him: "This problem is not because Negroes are Negroes, it is because they are newcomers. They are often at the bottom of the economic scale." The school man added an observation of equal relevance to the South:* "It is a sociological truth that until a person finds his place in society, he is rebellious."

Lost Viewpoint. Virtually every major U.P. paper in the South ran Kuettner's series; South Carolina's segregationist Greenville Piedmont gave it an eight-column top-of-the-banner headline. To most editors, Al Kuettner's byline was the story's best recommendation. He has amassed 45 file drawers on racial problems since spotting desegregation as a looming battle in 1945, roamed 3,600 miles through the South in 1956 to write a series on integration that won him Sigma Delta Chi's top award for general reporting.

Though his New York series will prompt few Southerners to trade in their prejudices, it bridged briefly a chasm that is making it increasingly difficult to report the news with any depth in the Deep South. As segregationist Atlanta Journal Editor Ray, who gave the series a big play, said last week with unconscious irony: "I don't think Kuettner presents the viewpoint of the South. I expect he has become so objective that he may have lost his viewpoint."

* Which has such serious delinquency problems as vandalism, theft and knife-carrying in some of its all-white schools. In Atlanta, of 3,700 juveniles who appeared before the courts in 1957, 50% were white.

PUPIL SLUGS TEACHER IN CIGARET DISPUTE

New York Troublemakers Join In Scuffle

NEW YORK, March 18.—(UP)—The first reported disturbance occurred Tuesday at one of New York City's emergency special schools for troublemakers. A group of surly teenagers scuffled with a teacher after he was slugged by a 15-year-old Negro pupil angered by a rule against carrying cigarets.

Police had to be called to halt the disturbance and the boy, whose name was not made public, was arrested on a juvenile delinquency charge.

The trouble broke out in the special school opened two weeks ago in Greenwich Village to keep juvenile delinquents segregated from other children in the public schools.

One of the rules of the troublemakers' schools is that they must be searched each morning for possession of knives, guns and other weapons and for cigarets.

Police said when Teacher Edward Carpenter tried to carry out the no-cigaret rule, he was met with opposition from a group of unruly boys. When he demanded that they surrender their cigarets, the 15-year-old slugged him, police said.

Then general scuffling and shoving took place, police said.

Irving M. Boroff, principal, at first denied there had been any difficulty. He said everything was calm during a discussion with "one or two boys who balked" at giving up cigarets.

Police gave the more colorful version.

MINNIJEAN BROWN

Welcome, Miss Brown

(From New York Post)

Our Town has long been a haven for refugees from all over the world. Their number will now be increased by one Negro American from Little Rock. Like all the others, Minnie Jean Brown, expelled from Central High School, will be looking for equality of opportunity. She will complete her year's education as a scholarship pupil at the New Lincoln School on W. 110th Street.

Minnie's expulsion for "talking back" to a white girl who cursed and struck her (and was not penalized) climaxed a cruel ordeal. Superintendent of Schools Virgil Blossom, who supported enforcement of the desegregation decision, recommended exiling this girl. Thus the pernicious influence of Gov. Faubus continues to corrupt or intimidate men of better instinct.

The grim truth seems to be that the white supremacists of Little Rock are gaining ground. Harassment of the few Negro students in Central High is increasing rather than abating. Although the school authorities have taken action against a few of the white offenders, integrationists those who merely wish to obey law are plainly on the defensive.

When a Negro girl is so drastically penalized for reacting as a human being under fire, it is no wonder that white youngsters in the school feel safe to resume the business of bullying. The school board, in expelling Minnie Jean, has put its stamp of approval on the segregationist strategy of terror.

Minnie Jean will find the demarcation line here less obvious. But part of the education she gets in Our Town will be the knowledge that we too practice racial discrimination, though more subtly than the folks back home. We hope it doesn't come as too much of a shock to her to discover the difference between New York and Little Rock is not as great as it should be. Possibly her arrival will inspire us to be worthy of her, and of the cause for which she and other Southern Negro children have stood so stoically and so valiantly. Little Rock's loss is our proud acquisition.

Little Rock Girl Starts School Here

'Marvelous' To Negro Student

By Peter D. Franklin

The desire of Minnijean Brown to be "just another student" has finally become a reality. The sixteen-year-old Negro girl, who was expelled a week ago from Central High School at Little Rock, Ark., began classes yesterday afternoon at The New Lincoln School, 31 W. 110th St.

In a whirlwind round of interviews and introductions during the morning at the private, interracial school, Minnijean met some of her eleventh-grade classmates and teachers and held a press conference, all of which she handled with facility and poise.

Herald Tribune New York N.Y. Tue. 3-25-58

Just Marvelous

"Oh, it's just marvelous, it's lovely," she said of her new school. "I don't expect to have any trouble here."

Her previous "trouble" was at Little Rock where she said she was a target of segregationist students during her five months at the integrated high school. The Little Rock School Board's decision to expel her apparently stemmed from her calling another girl student "white trash" after repeated harassment by the white girl. "But I definitely don't think I'm a trouble-maker," Minnijean said yesterday.

Dr. John J. Brooks, director of the school, who met Minnijean and her mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, at the door, said:

"We are very happy to have Minnijean Brown with us at New Lincoln School. We hope that she will be happy with us and that she will find here the normal school life which was denied her by the unusual circumstances at Little Rock. . . . We have experienced natural concern for a child who needs the educational facilities that have been denied her in her own community and it is my fervent hope that (she) . . . may now return to a normal program and normal pupil-teacher relationship."

Scores of Letters

An educator who taught in segregated Atlanta, Ga., public schools for about fifteen years and a former dean of Oglethorpe University there, Dr. Brooks said he had received scores of congratulatory letters upon inviting Minnijean to study at New Lincoln. One letter received yesterday, Dr. Brooks said, was from a group of his former students in Atlanta who heartily indorsed his action.

One crank letter had been received, he said, from Springfield, N. J., which was signed, "from White Citizens." Addressed to Minnijean, it said in part " . . . go back to Little Rock or Africa and live with fourth-class citizens that you are."

Minnijean, who was assigned a student "buddy" to show her the ropes, will study English, social studies, first-year French, advanced biology, physical education and probably music and art, two of the electives. She has received a tuition scholarship of about $600 for the semester which began Feb. 1.

At Professor's House

She is staying with the family of Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth B. Clark, who live in Hastings on Hudson, N. Y. Dr. Clark is a trustee of New Lincoln, associate professor of psychology at City College and director of the Northside Center for Child Development, situated at the same address as New Lincoln.

There are about fifty other Negroes at the school, Dr. Brooks said, in addition to many religions and nationalities. "I don't think she'll have much trouble catching up," he said, despite "an impoverished educational background."

From the look of happiness and relief on Minnijean's face yesterday, it appeared she had already taken the biggest step in "catching up."

Has 'No Hate' for Little Rock

Minnijean Resumes Schooling Here

Minnijean Brown, the 16-year-old Negro girl who was expelled from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., scene of racial segregation rioting, said today she had no animosity in her heart as she resumed her education here.

"I don't hate them (her former classmates)," she declared. "They felt they were right and I felt I was right." Minnijean made the remarks after being enrolled in the New Lincoln School, 31 W. 110th St., a private interracial school.

She promptly told reporters she didn't "expect to have any trouble here." Her arrival caused considerable excitement among her new classmates. Dozens peered from the school's windows to get a peek at the girl who focused still more nationwide attention on the Little Rock school.

Minnijean was dropped from Central high school after altercations with white students.

"I was the first," she said. "I'm sure they'll get another."

Dr. John J. Brooks, director of the New Lincoln School, said a tuition scholarship awarded Minnijean amounted to about $600 and would carry her through the rest of the year. He said if the girl wanted another scholarship next year she probably could have it.

Asked for her own comment on today's events, Minnijean replied: "I don't want to be the center of attraction. I'll be glad when I'm just another student."

$500 gift to Minnie Jean

NEW YORK — The Committee for United Negro Relief presented $500 to Minnie jean Brown, former student of Little Rock, Arkansas, to defray her personal expenses in New York.

The presentation was made at the home of Judge Francis Rivers, whose wife, Alroy, is a member of the organization's Board of Directors.

The action came after the committee's chairman, Mrs. Daisy Hicks, had polled the organization's members and board by phone and they agreed that the courageous Little Rock student was a good example of the type of civil rights fighter which the organization has pledged itself to help.

THE COMMITTEE IS made up of 33 women who raise funds thru benefits and social affairs for the organization. This money is then turned over to a board of directors made up of 8 nationally known women, who make the final decision as to who is worthy to receive financial aid. The board bases its decision on the need and the civil rights stand taken by the recipient.

Members of the board are Dr. Mamie Clark, Judge Jane Bolin, Assemblywoman Bessie Buchanan, Mrs. Alroy Rivers, Mrs. Elizabeth Waring, Mrs. Ruth Whitehead Whaley, Mrs. Betty Granger and Mrs. Lena Powell.

A Temporary Special School for Suspended Pupils Is Opened in Greenwich Village

A mother escorts her boy into Public School 701, Manhattan, which is the old P. S. 41 building at 46 Greenwich Avenue. Another special school was opened by the Board of Education in Brooklyn for pupils suspended in current crackdown on juvenile delinquency.

Later in the morning Mrs. Sylvia Balick, rear, and Mrs. Jane Amsterdam, members of P. T. A. of new P. S. 41 next door, objected to condition of the 91-year-old building.

2 Problem-Pupil Schools Open; Fire Warning Leads to Dispute

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.

The Board of Education opened two special schools yesterday for pupils suspended in the crackdown on juvenile delinquency.

A board spokesman declared that "both schools opened quietly and effectively."

However, the opening of one, in Greenwich Village, was marked by bitter community opposition. After a heated verbal exchange with the principal, the local school district chairman threatened to go to the Fire Department to have the building closed as a fire hazard.

Eighteen of twenty-two boys who were assigned to the schools reported yesterday morning, accompanied by parents or relatives. Of the four who failed to show up, three were "presumed truant." The other was enrolled in a non-public school.

The two new schools are regarded as temporary facilities for use until the board decides what to do with the suspended youngsters.

The board plans to open two more similar schools. All told the special schools will enroll about 600 pupils. More than 700 students have been suspended since Feb. 7 when the schools began cracking down on youths charged with crimes.

The Greenwich Village school is housed in the old Public School 41 building at 46 Greenwich Avenue. The ninety-one-year-old structure adjoins the new Public School 41.

The other facility is in the abandoned Public School 111 building at Sterling Place and Vanderbilt Avenue, Brooklyn. It had four pupils yesterday, with two "unaccounted for."

Their new designations are Public School 701, Manhattan, and Public School 701, Brooklyn.

The Manhattan school has been the center of controversy since the board announced last week that it would be opened.

Members of the Parent-Teachers Association of Public School 41 and officials of the local school board, who are appointed by the borough president, led the opposition. They charged that the old building was not safe for pupils and that its proximity to the new elementary school constituted a potential hazard to the regular pupils.

The first pupils arrived at the Manhattan school at about 8:15 A. M., thirty minutes earlier than the scheduled reporting time.

Despite the request of Superintendent of Schools William Jansen that news men stay away, about twenty-five reporters, photographers and television camera men were outside the building.

The pupils quietly entered the drab-colored, weather-worn building through a side door. With one exception, they ignored the whirring and clicking cameras and the questions of reporters. The exception, a boy about 14 or 15 years old, turned to photographers with a broad smile and made a mock bow in their direction.

A few passers-by on their way to work stopped and stared. "What those kids need is a good beating," one elderly man said.

A policeman, one of several posted conspicuously near the building, said: "They ought to bring up a couple of D. I.'s [Marine drill instructors] from Parris Island to teach them a few things."

Principal Makes Statement

At 8:30, Irving M. Boroff, the principal, and Leo Calarco, chairman of Local School Board No. 1, arrived on the scene from different directions. Last Friday Mr. Calarco had threatened court action against the school system if it maintained a "700" school in the old building.

Mr. Boroff invited news men inside the building, saying:

"We have a school to run here. I will give you a statement—but that is all."

"We at P. S. 701," he said, reading from his statement, "will strive to modify the former behavior of our pupils by offering them the kind of class and school atmosphere that will bring about a desire on their part to attend school regularly, to improve their curriculum areas, to become improved participating citizens both in school and in the community."

He said that the youngsters attending the school would be kept in class and under supervision until 2:45 P. M., when they would be escorted to their subways or buses by teachers who would accompany them a short distance.

"When the community sees the good work our school will do," the statement concluded, "they will offer to help because 'There but for the Grace of God...'"

Mr. Boroff answered a few questions from reporters. He said that the average age of the pupils was 13 or 14, that sixteen boys were expected the first day, and that eventually the enrollment might build up to 100.

Called a Fire Trap

At this point, Mr. Calarco declared:

"We are not interfering with the Board of Education but this building is a fire trap. If this building ever caught fire it would be worse than the Wooster Street fire."

In a recent fire at 137 Wooster Street, two city firemen and four men of the Fire Patrol died.

When Mr. Calarco said that parts of the building were unsafe, the principal interjected:

"There is a complete bar-

Remember Minniejean?

NEW YORK — "We're delighted at the way this thing has worked out, and Minniejean has made it easy for us in the whole situation through her poise and character. ."

Thus spoke Dr. John R. Brooks, director of the New Lincoln School, in reporting the progress of Minniejean Brown, a former student at Little Rock, Ark. Central High School.

The 16-year-old girl entered the 11th grade of the experimental and demonstration school on Feb. 24, under a scholarship for the term ending June 8.

A week earlier she had been expelled from the integrated Little Rock school for the rest of the term after she cried "white trash" at a girl who called her names.

"It is astonishing to me that this girl is able to do satisfactory work despite her impoverished academic background and the emotional impact of her prior situation and removal to the New Lincoln School," Dr. Brooks said.

He said Miss Brown "has made an excellent adjustment, is doing satisfactory work and has earned the friendship and respect of us all."

MISS BROWN is taking English, French, social studies and biology as major subjects, in addition to art, music and physical education classes.

This is a typical schedule at New Lincoln, believed to be perhaps double the work in majors she might have had at Little Rock.

Soon after her arrival at New Lincoln, she was elected vice president of her home room, and served a regular six-week term. She attended the only school dance held up to now and has taken part in various committee projects.

ricade down through one side of the building. It won't be used. We plan to use certain classrooms only. Two on one floor, three on another. . . ."

Mr. Boroff refused to allow Mr. Calarco and another board member to take newsmen on a tour of the building. Later whe na photographer obtained permission to photograph the barricade, he was taken to a wooden bench placed in front of two paneled doors blocking a corridor.

When Mr. Calarco continued to voice protests about the building, Mr. Boroff asked a police inspector who had just entered the building to "put every out."

Mr. Calarco objected:

"You can't put us out. We're on the local school board. We're commissioners."

The inspector, Phillip Walsh, tried to calm the dispute and eventually the group left the building of its own accord.

Many shopkeepers on Greenwich Avenue made it clear that they did not welcome the new pupils. Fred Lammer, who runs a tailor shop at 33 Greenwich Avenue, said:

"I don't think these kids belong in any densely populated place in the city. They'll only get worse here in that building."

Suspensions cause problem—

N.Y. Legion post urges Guard use in school crisis

NEW YORK, Feb. 8—(AP)—The problem of what to do with 644 or more trouble-making pupils ousted from public schools confronted city officials Saturday.

No one had come up with a solution that would keep them from remaining idle at home or roaming the streets, but state and city officials were hoping for an answer next week.

A New York City American Legion post, in telegrams sent to Gov. Wagner, Thursday, prior to the suspension and made public Saturday, suggested use of the National Guard if necessary to protect non-delinquent pupils and the facilities.

"If there are not sufficient police, then the emergency dictates the use of the State Guard," said the telegram, sent by Robert L. Hague Post No. 1242.

The mass suspensions Friday stirred a chorus of protests from parent and other organizations, accompanied by a demand for a legislative investigation of the city school system.

Race, sex not given

THE PUPILS were suspended Friday in a board of education crackdown on juvenile delinquency. The 644 total was incomplete, as some schools had not reported their figures. There was no breakdown of the figures by race or sex.

The action followed a series of rapes, knifings and other disorders involving white and Negro students on or near school property. The principal of a school where a rape occurred committed suicide after testifying before a Grand Jury.

A statement by the United Parents Assn. was typical of the protests over the suspensions. It said:

"Sending idle delinquents into the streets cannot be considered the answer. This could create a more serious problem."

On the other hand, the High School Teachers Assn. said the suspensions were the first step in "once more making the schools institutions of learning."

"For a long time these kids have felt they could get away with it, that they couldn't be touched," one educator said.

The city has almost a thousand schools and almost a million pupils. The board has said that less than 1 per cent causes the trouble.

The association said "the city administration must now do its share and provide facilities immediately to take care of these young people who are unemployed or rebellious."

State Education Commissioner James E. Allen, in Albany, announced he was sending a team of education officials to the city early next week to report to him "on what the state can do to assist in expediting a constructive solution to the suspended pupil problem."

He made the announcement in a telegram to William Jansen, New York City superintendent of schools.

Mayor Robert E. Wagner, a Democrat, said he was conferring with other city officials about providing what he called temporary facilities for the ousted pupils.

The demand for the legislative investigation came from two Queens Republicans, State Sen. Walter G. McGahan of Bayside and Assemblyman Charles T. Eckstein of Ridgewood.

THEY DESCRIBED the school situation as a general mess and said they would ask a $35,000 appropriation for an investigation.

A form letter sent by school authorities to parents of the ousted pupils gave no indication of how long the suspensions would last. The notice said "your son or daughter (name) is suspended from attending classes in any public school until further notice," and added:

"You will be informed of the time and place of the hearing when you will be given an opportunity to discuss this matter."

Some of the children got the news in school. They were told not to report for school Monday. Others were truant.

544 Students Suspended By N.Y. Schools

Principals Act In Move To End Classroom Violence

NEW YORK, Feb. 7 (U.P.) — School authorities today suspended 544 troublemaking students in a drastic move to halt violence in the city's classrooms.

Scores of students were hauled from classrooms and sent home as school principals acted swiftly to enforce the edict of the Board of Education banning students charged with acts of violence and insubordination.

The crackdown followed the demand of a Brooklyn Grand Jury that immediate action be taken to stop the wave of assaults, stabbings and rapes that have plagued many of the city's 800 public schools.

The school board, reluctant at first to act, was faced with a new source of embarrassment today when William Schneck, 45, a Brooklyn teacher, was arrested and charged with a felony morals crime and with impairing the morals of a 14-year-old boy.

Schneck, a bachelor, also was accused of making advances toward four other boys.

The Board of Education also disclosed that 219 other students had been placed on suspension before the "get-tough" policy was announced last night.

Most of today's suspensions occurred in Brooklyn, where 339 students were sent home.

The students will not be permitted to return to school until they are cleared by a court of the crimes charged against them.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner ordered Youth Board Director Ralph Whalen to make a detailed study on the progress made by the city in combatting juvenile delinquency. Wagner said the city is now spending about $33 million on the problem.

Wagner backed up the school board in suspending troublemakers. He said it had been shown that such students became disruptive influences when they returned to school.

Wagner said one of the difficulties was lack of detention facilities for youthful offenders.

The city's Youth House, opened two weeks ago, is now the only place for detention of delinquents. It had 222 boys in it when opened. There are now 310 boys there, and the crowding has forced conversion of the gymnasium into a dormitory.

Charles Silver, president of the Board of Education, suggested that Ellis Island might be acquired as a temporary place to hold delinquents.

544 Pupils Fired as Intractables

NEW YORK, Feb. 7 (AP)—New York city's schools Friday expelled 544 pupils as chronic troublemakers.

The mass suspensions came in the wake of a new ultimatum to sweep the school system clean of intractable delinquents.

Both boys and girls were included in the ousters.

The largest exodus was from Brooklyn, area of many of the recent school rapes, stabbings and disorders that spurred the new disciplinary measures.

There, 339 pupils were suspended. In other boroughs, the totals were: Manhattan, 113; Bronx, 51; Queens, 36, and Staten Island, five.

NY Schools Suspend 644 Trouble Makers

NEW YORK, Feb. 7 (AP)—New York City's schools today suspended at least 644 pupils as chronic troublemakers. Some 544 were suspended from elementary, junior high and vocational high schools and at least 100 others were suspended from academic high schools.

High school figures were incomplete because many operated sessions well into the afternoon. One-third of the high schools reported the 100 suspensions. There are more than 150,000 students in academic high schools.

The mass suspensions came in the wake of an ultimatum to sweep the school system clean of delinquents.

Both boys and girls were included in the ousters.

The largest exodus was from Brooklyn, scene of many of the recent school rapes, stabbings, and disorders that spurred the new disciplinary measures.

Aside from academic high school students, 339 pupils were suspended in Brooklyn, 113 in Manhattan, 51 in The Bronx, 36 in Queens, and 5 in Staten Island.

School Supt. William Jansen said the number removed was lower than the one per cent of pupils estimated previously to be the main malefactors. The city's vast school system has nearly one million pupils. The announcement of the expulsions gave no numerical breakdown by race or sex.

Prior to today, there had been only 219 students under suspension.

Jansen had broadcast the orders for suspending misbehaving students over a special closed-circuit school radio to the city's 900 school principals.

He made it clear that not only students charged with crimes, but also habitual troublemakers should be expelled.

This represented a stiffer approach than was indicated when the Board of Education authorized the new move yesterday.

Jansen, in his detailed instructions to principals, said, "Any student with a record of serious misbehavior who continues misbehaving may also be suspended."

The action brought into immediate and sharp focus the problem of what to do with the ousted pupils.

Mayor Robert Wagner said he was conferring with other city officials about finding some "temporary facilities" that could be made available to handle suspended pupils.

In some cases in the past, students convicted of delinquency in court have been sent back to school because there was no room for them in juvenile institutions.

Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, asked the city to acquire Ellis Island, the historic detention center for illegal immigrants, as a place of custody for overflow juvenile delinquents.

The school board's new policy on suspensions was invoked despite a state compulsory education law requiring schools to admit all children up to 17 who are not in custodial institutions.

However, in Albany, State Education Commissioner James E. Allen said today it was "very clear that there is present authority" for the board members "to do what they want to do" in the situation.

Mayor Wagner appealed for more help from parents in coping with the situation.

"The schools," he said, "don't control these youngsters day and night. A lot of their problems result from the home. . . . It's a big problem to try to get some families interested in their children."

A Brooklyn grand jury has been probing the wave of school disorders, and says it plans to issue its recommendations soon.

Schools Suspend 544 in New Drive To Curb Violence

Offenders Ousted Now Total 763

Where to Send Them Is Issue

By Leonard Buder

Superintendent of Schools William Jansen announced that 544 children out of the approximately 800,000 in the city's elementary, junior high and vocational high schools were suspended yesterday under the Board of Education's new policy of ousting "violent" students "to protect the innocent."

The 544 brought to 763 the number of students now under suspension for wrongdoing. The figure did not include any possible suspensions among the 170,000 students in the academic and technical high schools, since reports from these were incomplete.

Categories Affected

The 544 suspensions included those students accused of criminal violence or insubordination, as specified in the board's new statement of policy on Thursday. The suspensions also include students on parole or probation or under suspended sentence who had not been institutionalized or institutionalized only briefly and are still regarded as troublemakers by the administrators, and students with a continuing record of "serious misbehavior."

These last categories were added by Dr. Jansen in instructions issued to administrators at 11 a. m. yesterday by interschool radio.

The suspension in themselves are not contrary to the State Education law, an official of the State Education Department said, noting that the board has long had the power of suspension and of "exemption," or expelling certain students. What is contrary to the law, he said, is the "forthwith" suspension of students without the board's making provisions for their continued education, whether in an institution or under some other auspices.

No Instruction Provided

The board itself acknowledged this in its policy statement, declaring that the board "makes it clear that it recognizes that in such cases," of students suspended because they have been charged with a crime and refused re-admission unless they are found innocent, "under existing conditions, no instruction can be provided for such students."

The board then noted that it "has a duty to protect the innocent from the violent and that it is the duty of other public agencies to provide for custody of pupils having violent tendencies."

Thus, by flouting the law, the board was pin-pointing what one state education official termed the "ring around the rosy" system of dealing iwth "violent" youngsters.

Facilities for remanding delinquents either temporarily or for long terms are so overcrowded that the courts put them on parole, or probation or under suspended sentence and they return to school.

Previously the Board of Education had to see that a suspended student was either institutionalized or otherwise dealt with to provide him with instruction until he was seventeen. Now it has closed its dors and made "other public agencies" responsible.

One state official said that the legal lines will be drawn when a court orders the Board of Education to take back these students.

As to providing custodial facilities, Mayor Wagner said yesterday, "We're going to get busy on that today." He said he still awaiting figures from the courts on what facilities are needed, although Dr. Jansen said yesterday that the 544 suspensions in line with the new policy "bore out" an estimate by John Warren Hill, presiding justice of the Court of Domestic Relations, that 600 "beds" were needed. Gov. Harriman has offered to provide 200 "beds," while Mayor Wagner has sought 400.

Mayor Backs Policy

The Mayor, who readily admitted that he had read a newspaper editorial denouncing political influences in the selection of Board of Education members, said that he had not "had an opportunity to read the full report," referring to the board's two-paragraph statement of its new policy carried in text in all newspapers. He indorsed the policy generally, however, noting, "As I recall, it's in line with the decision" reached at meetings with Board of Education members.

As had been pointed out by the Citizens Committee on Children of New York City, Inc., and the New York Civil Liberties Union, the Mayor was asked if he did not think there was an "unfair" presumption of guilt in ousting children who are only "charged" with a crime. The Mayor replied:

"On the other hand, you have a boy who knifes another and goes back to school the next day and say, 'Look, they can't do anything to me.'"

This was an apparent reference to one of the cases that had precipitated the board's action, that of a fourteen-year-old boy who stabbed a junior high school monitor on Wednesday, was paroled by a Children's Court Judge in his parents' custody for hearing next week, and reapeared in school Thursday.

Implementing Policy

In his closed-circuit broadcast to school principals, Dr Jansen said the board wanted to implement its policy "as promptly as possible, consistent with the welfare of all concerned." He directed:

"Although the policy is not retroactive, it should be applied at once to cases like the following:

"1. Where children have been convicted in court but have been sent back to school because there was no room in an appropriate institution. If such children continue to be guilty of misconduct—suspend them.

"2. Those who have returned from institutoins, perhaps prematurely, and who continue to be severe troublemakers or frequent truants, should also be suspended.

"3. Any student with a record of serious misbehavior who continues in misbehaving may also be suspended.

Dr. Jensen said that, "In all three types of cases, the attitude of the parent is an important factor. If parents demonstrate a very strong spirit of full co-operation, your decision should be influenced accordingly. And he continued:

"Cases which are awaiting court action on charges involving violence or insubordination should be suspended, if you have not already done so.

"No doubt there are cases where the decisions may be difficult. Please make a list of such cases for discussion with your assistant superintendent."

School administrators said later that they were hoping for "clarification" on procedures in general and even assistant and associate superintendents said that they did not know whether the suspended children were "simply told to leave and not come back" or how the suspensions had been made by the individual principal. Nor were they clear on how long a student is "suspended" before he becomes, in effect, "expelled."

Ousters in All Boroughs

Dr. Jansen said that in the schools reporting to him there had been 219 children on suspension before yesterday. Of the 544 more suspended yesterday, 113 were suspended in Manhattan schools, 51 in Bronx, 339 in Brooklyn, 36 in Queens and five in Richmond.

Says Minniejean's 'Expulsion' False

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Rumors that Minniejean Brown, 16-year-old former student at Little Rock Central High school, faces expulsion were branded false this week by Dr. John R. Brooks, director of the New Lincoln school.

Dr. Brooks said: "We have heard these rumors with astonishment, inasmuch as Minniejean Brown has made an excellent adjustment, is doing satisfactory work and has earned the friendship and respect of us all."

"It is astonishing to me," he added, "that this girl is able to do satisfactory work despite her impoverished academic background and the emotional impact of her prior situation and removal to New Lincoln school."

He said the faculty and the entire 433 student body — about 50 of whom are Negroes — are "delighted at the way this thing has worked out, and Minniejean has made it very easy for us in the whole situation through her poise and character.

The girl entered the experimental- demonstration school on Feb. 24, under a scholarship for the term ending June 8. Dr. Brooks said her future plans so far "extend only through the summer during which she plans to visit her home."

School Headed by Principal in Suicide Had Not Been Considered Difficult

New York Times

By LEONARD BUDER

Time and again, George Goldfarb, principal of John Marshall Junior High School, who committed suicide yesterday, would admonish his pupils to steer clear of trouble.

"If you mind your business," he would say, "nothing will happen."

But in the last eight days Mr. Goldfarb found that no matter how he tried he could not keep trouble away from his school. A flurry of incidents turned the school, in the public eye, into a blackboard jungle—a symbol of rampant violence in the schools.

Up until the first incident—the reported rape of a 13-year-old girl—John Marshall Junior High School was just another one of the city's more than 800 public schools. In fact, it was considered to be better off than many other junior high schools.

Situated in the ethnically changing Crown Heights section, at Park Place and Rochester Avenue, the school is not classified as difficult according to the Board of Education standards. Almost one-third of all junior high schools and one-quarter of the elementary schools are officially considered to be difficult.

Pupils Are Adolescents

John Marshall, which also carries the numerical designation of Junior High School 210 has 1,200 pupils enrolled in grades seven through nine. Its pupils are mostly from 13 to 15 years old. Educators generally consider this age group to be the most difficult of all.

The family backgrounds of the students cover a wide social and economic range. However, there is an unmistakable downtrend. In recent years many of the neighborhood's once-fashionable homes have been converted into multiple dwellings to house the influx of low-income residents.

The school's student body reflects the community—45 per cent is Negro, 10 per cent is Puerto Rican and the rest is mainly white. The school has always taken pride in its integrated enrollment. This term the president of the student government is a Chinese-American, the vice president is of Polish extraction, the secretary is Jewish and the treasurer is Negro. The school's active parents' association has a white president and a Negro vice president.

Unlike many other city schools, John Marshall has no problem of overcrowding and no double or triple sessions. It presents a full academic program, including instruction in three foreign languages. Its classes for intellectually gifted children attract pupils from other schools in the area. Twenty-five student clubs attest the interest the youngsters and teachers have inn extracurricular affairs.

Building Being Renovated

From thep hysical standpoint, the school is regarded as being in "pretty good shape" for a building that is more than thirty years old. It is now undergoing renovation and repainted.

But the school has its troubles, too, and they were apparent even before last week's incidents. A "small, tough element of student troublemakers" has been causing concern for some years, according to one school official.

In addition, as is true in many other schools in difficult areas, the school has suffered from occasional invasions by troublemakers from the general community. The assaults last Thursday on a patrolman and a recreational leader at the school were by teen-age boys who were not pupils there.

"All in all," a school spokesman said yesterday, "Mr. Goldfarb felt that he was bringing the problem under control. He seemed to be on top of the situation."

Yesterday, however, Mr. Goldfarb leaped six floors to his death

ONE SCHOOL FINDS POLICE AID USEFUL

Principal at Commerce High Says Lunch-Time Patrol Is Needed in Rough Area

By MORRIS KAPLAN

School days are hardly golden rule days at Manhattan's High School of Commerce.

In an atmosphere heavily charged with racial, socjal and cultural differences, learning to live together is not always easy. Doing unto others what you would have them do unto you becomes a formidable challenge.

June P 22
2-4-58

The school's 2,100 students seemingly ignored the presence yesterday of a policeman posted outside their basement cafeteria. Patrolman Patrick Campbell takes the duty in stride. It goes with patrolling Broadway and Columbus Avenue up to Sixty-sixth Street, he said. His orders are to keep outsiders from intruding during the cafeteria hours, 11 A. M. to 1:30 P. M.

New York M.Y.

The patrolman barred nine youths from "intruding" yesterday. They entered through West Sixty-fifth Street doors, which presumably were locked from the outside. Patrolman Campbell directed them to another entrance after inspecting their student programs.

Slivers Keep Door Open

He then investigated the doors. He found that slivers of wood had been placed between the door and the jamb so the door would not lock. He muttered something like the "kids were cute."

But there has been no major trouble of late, he said. There was a flurry of excitement a month ago over "table rights," and the ensuing din reminded him of "a movie scene of a prison riot." No one was hurt, however, and the noise subsided.

"They're young and a little wild, I guess," said the patrolman.

The job of maintaining discipline is the school's, not the police department's. The principal, Vincent McGarrett, requested and obtained a patrolman eighteen months ago, after two intruders had invaded the cafeteria and assaulted a student guard and a teacher.

A relative calm has since settled on the school, which is at 155 West Sixty-fifth Street.

Mr. McGarrett believes the patrolman's presence is an effective deterrent, "an ounce of prevention." Without police protection, there might be difficulties with intruders. The students themselves were said to be "completely amenable to our control."

5 Assaults of Teachers

In Mr. McGarrett's twelve years as principal, there have been five instances when teachers were assaulted, twice by students.

In each instance of serious misbehavior, Mr. McGarrett has insisted that the culprits be prosecuted. His philosophy is born of a series of violent episodes he has coped with in a tough neighborhood. He terms it a problem area.

Although he acknowledged that Commerce was one of the "more rugged" schools, he noted that this was caused less by racial differences than by social and cultural differences. The student body is 40 per cent Negro, 30 per cent Puerto Rican and 30 per cent white.

They live in old Hell's Kitchen, in the West Forties; in the old San Juan Hill neighborhood near by, extending west from Amsterdam Avenue to the Hudson River; in West Harlem, and in an area near the East River and the Sixties.

The school is just north of the projected cultural center that is to be part of the Lincoln Square redevelopment, between Broadway and Amsterdam Avenues. The area is crowded with dreary four-story brownstone buildings whose cramped living quarters command relatively high rents.

Many who live in West Harlem come from broken homes. They have little parental discipline and reflect this in their demeanor at school.

Many recently off the boat or plane from Puerto Rico move uncertainly in a strange culture. They attend special classes where bilingual teachers strive to orient them. It takes about a year.

In the relaxed, noisy cafeteria atmosphere, a pattern of coexistence emerged. Students in cliques dined on nutritious fare —two slices of bread and butter, spaghetti and three meat balls and one-third of a quart of milk — for 32 cents. There seemed to be almost no basis for reports less than two years ago of a threatened "rumble" between the races.

'Village' Residents Oppose Plan For School for Suspended Pupils

Times New York
Fri. 2-28-58

By LEONARD BUDER

The Board of Education's plans to open a temporary school on Monday in Greenwich Village for suspended pupils ran into strong opposition yesterday from residents of the area.

More than forty residents, almost all of them members of a parent-teacher group, attended yesterday's board meeting.

Despite the protests, the board authorized the establishment of two "700" schools to house some of the 726 youngsters suspended in the school system's current crackdown on delinquent pupils.

One of the schools, designated as Public School 701, Manhattan, will be in the old P. S. 41 at 36 Greenwich Avenue, in Greenwich Village. The other, known as Public School 701 Brooklyn, will be housed in the abandoned P. S. 111 building at Sterling Place and Vanderbilt Avenue.

Mrs. Randy Stiles, who appeared before the board meeting as the representative of the Parent-Teachers Association of P. S. 41, noted that the old building adjoined the new P. S. 41, which was opened a few months ago.

"The immediate proximity of the newly organized 701 school to the elementary school P. S. 41," she declared, "constitutes a threat to the safety and welfare of our small children."

She also asserted that the old structure, which is ninety-one years old, was antiquated and a fire hazard. She said it was not a fit facility for the difficult students.

Mrs. Stiles said the school board had promised to demolish the old structure and use the site for a playground for P. S. 41. Superintendent of Schools William Jansen assured the group that the board intended to keep that promise and that the temporary school would not exist in the old building "a day after June 30."

Fri. 2-28-58

After the board meeting, Mrs. Stiles told newsmen that many parents in the area "are talking about keeping their children home from school next wek."

State Assemblyman William F. Passannante, whose district takes in Greenwich Village, also registered his protests with the board. He said many other facilities were available to house the suspended youngsters. He added that he intended to ask Dr. James E. Allen Jr., the State Education Commissioner, to intervene in the dispute.

Mr. Passannante described the old school structure as a "purgatory" that would only sharpen the delinquent puipls "distaste for school."

Another speaker who appeared before the board to protest the opening of the temporary school was Floyd Linder, a real estate broker. He was identified as being a "representative of business men on Greenwich Avenue."

Mr. Linder said the board's action had "horrified" the entire community and would lead to organized opposition from groups in the area.

After hearing the protests, Dr. Jansen explained that the system had operated "600" schools—which are special units for problem pupils—for many years without experiencing any difficulties from the communities.

He pointed to one 600 school in the Bronx, situated across the street from an elementary school, and asserted that "not a single incident has occurred between pupils of the two schools."

The calendar for the Board of Education meeting produced a surprise. It listed "one vacancy" on the nine-member board. The missing name was that of the Rev. Dr. John M. Coleman, the only Negro on the board. Dr. Coleman submitted his resignation to the Mayor several weeks ago, citing ill health as the reason, but there has been no public announcement that the resignation was accepted.

Harold F. Hay, secretary of the board, said the board had not received any official word on the acceptance of the resignation but had decided to abide by Dr. Coleman's wishes.

New York School Problems—

Student Woes Not Racial, But Negroes Are Clannish

(Second of Three Articles)

By AL KUETTNER
United Press Staff Writer

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Let me take you to a school in Brooklyn so plagued by violence and insubordination that 38 of its students have been kicked out in the past two weeks.

One out of five of the pupils here is Negro. Another 15 per cent are Puerto Rican. Thirty per cent are Jewish, including some children from European refugee families who only recently came to the United States.

It is one of the worst schools in the city for disciplinary problems. The 38 suspended under a recent city edict permitting such drastic steps against troublemakers represents six per cent of the citywide total.

It is East District High School, a four-story stucco building with no playground. It sits in the midst of endless rows of ancient brownstone houses, now split into apartments, their stoop steps littered with open garbage cans.

This is a critical slum area and the school is on the front line of this big city's harrowing efforts to educate its children under trying conditions.

Cab Driver Lectures

Threading through cluttered and narrow streets, the cab driver gave me as fervent a lecture on behalf of racial segregation as I've ever heard from Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin.

"This was once a beautiful and peaceful section," the cabbie said. "Now it is fliled up with Negroes and Puerto Ricans and your life isn't worth 25 cents on the streets at night."

With the combined gloom of the driver and the surroundings in mind, it is quite a shock to swing open the great doors of what was identified to me as "one of our problem schools."

Classes are just at the period change and well-lighted and wide corridors are jammed with chattering teenagers. There has been no racial segregation here for years. Negroes move with seeming self-confidence among fellow students.

"There's one point, however, that cannot escape notice—except for strictly school operations, Negroes and other racial groups tend to gravitate toward their own people at the school.

In the gymnasium, mixed groups are shooting basketballs at the six backboards, but the tendency is for Negroes—by choice—to line up together.

Friendly Relations

There was nothing apparent during a lengthy and unconducted tour of this school to indicate any group was being discriminated against. Yet, in the corridors and in those typical after-school gatherings, this tendency of racial groups to cling together persisted.

Negro boys and girls, questioned at random, told me that relations with white pupils are cordial and friendly, that there are no inter-racial fights.

A white girl called out cheerily to a Negro as they left the building: "Have a nice week end."

The place, in fact, seems like any high school the country over, except for the mixture of races. Where, then, are the troublemakers?

Well, 38 of them are out on the streets. Each will get a hearing to see whether he is to be permanently expelled. The others are under the determined thumb of Principal Louis K. Wechsler.

Wechsler has been principal of East District High for six years. He has three characteristics that make him a valuable administrator for a school in such a neighborhood as this. He is a strict disciplinarian, he knows his job and he loves children.

Before coming here, he brought into line within a month a junior high school that had a history of rape, stabbings and theft; where a teacher was pitched headlong down the stairs by a pupil.

Not Racial Problem

"You ask me if the problem in the New York school system today is racial, and I can tell you it is not and I mean it," Wechsler said.

He acknowledges, as do many New Yorkers, that the 41 per cent increase in the city's non-white population in the past seven years has created critical problems. For one thing it has brought a heavy influx of Negroes to this school.

"This problem is not because Negroes are Negroes," he said. "It is because they are newcomers. They are often at the bottom of the economic scale. They have not been recognized. And it is a sociological truth that until a person finds his place in society he is rebellious.

"We must learn not to get sentimental over race, but to get sentimental over people."

Wechsler then plunged with fervor into what he believes is the core of this city's school problem—it needs to get tough with the young hoodlums.

"We are reaping the product of 15 years of misdirected humanitarianism in our schools and we have done everybody, including the children, a disservice," he said.

He is a staunch advocate—and obviously a prolific user—of the new policy permitting suspension of troublemakers.

"The disregard of the group for the sake of the individual is wrong," he said. "We have no more right to expose a class of pupils to a person who cannot be taught than we have to expose society to a person who cannot be cured of a disease.

Preparing New School

"We are neither psychiatrists nor prison keepers. We are in school to teach and to learn. It is about time New York and the nation recognize that there are certain children in any city who retard that goal and should be dealt with swiftly."

New York is preparing to open a special custodial high school for youngsters of a troublesome nature and Wechsler says the lack of such schools has been at the bottom of the trouble.

One of Wechsler's teachers, a veteran of 30 years in the New York school system, seems to catch some of the school's worst disciplinary problems. A number are Negroes or Puerto Rican.

"When I feel there is a need," he told me, "I will get one of these fellows up before my class and tell him 'I am not punishing you because of your race; I'm doing it because you deserve the punishment.' "

(Tomorrow: Puerto Ricans, a bigger problem than the Negroes?)

LITTLE ROCK EXILE 'DELIGHTS' SCHOOL

Girl Expelled in Integration Incident Reported to Be Doing Well Here

By PETER KIHSS

The New Lincoln School reported yesterday that it was "delighted" at the way Minnijean Brown, a former student at Little Rock, Ark., Central High School had progressed here.

The 16-year-old Negro girl entered the eleventh grade of the experimental and demonstration school at 31 West 110th Street on Feb. 24, under a scholarship for the term ending June 8.

One week earlier she had been expelled from the integrated Arkansas school for the rest of the term after racial incidents in which she cried "white trash" at a girl who called her names.

Dr. John R. Brooks, the school director, said that rumors that she faced expulsion here were "false."

'Astonished' at Rumors

"We have heard these rumors with astonishment," he said, "inasmuch as Minnijean Brown has made an excellent adjustment, is doing satisfactory work and has earned the friendship and respect of us all.

"It is astonishing to me that this girl is able to do satisfactory work despite her impoverished academic background and the emotional impact of her prior situation and removal to the New Lincoln School."

The school, which charges $1,050 for a year's tuition, lunches and testing, offered Miss Brown a scholarship "to do something for equal opportunity and to relieve the interracial situation."

About fifty of its 433 students are Negroes.

Her Subjects Listed

Dr. Brooks said, "We're delighted at the way this thing has worked out, and Minnijean has made it very easy for us in the whole situation through her poise and character."

Miss Brown is taking English, French, social studies and biology as major subjects, in addition to art, music and physical education classes. This is a typical New Lincoln schedule, believed to be perhaps double the work in majors she might have had at Little Rock.

Soon after her arrival, she was elected vice president of her home room, and served a regular six-week term. She attended the only school dance held up to now, and has taken part in various committee projects.

Dr. Brooks said her future plans so far "extend only through the summer, during which she plans to visit her home."

CHRONIC TROUBLEMAKERS

554 N. Y. School Pupils Suspended

NEW YORK, Feb. 7 (AP)—New York City's schools today suspended 554 elementary, junior high and vocational high pupils as chronic trouble-makers. The figures do not include suspensions in regular high schools, where it was reported as many as 100 more students are ticketed for suspension.

The mass suspensions came in the wake of a new ultimatum to sweep the school system clean of intractable delinquents.

Both boys and girls were included in the ousters.

The largest exodus was from Brooklyn, area of many of the recent school rapes, stabbings and disorders that spurred the new disciplinary measures.

There, 339 pupils were suspended. In other boroughs, the totals were: Manhattan, 113; Bronx, 51; Queens, 36, and Staten Island, 5.

School Supt. William Jansen said the number removed was lower than the one per cent of pupils estimated previously to be the main malefactors. The city's vast school system has nearly one million pupils. The announcement of the expulsions gave no numercial breakdown by race or sex. In most of the publicized more serious incidents, Negroes and Puerto Ricans have been assailants of whites.

Prior to today, there had been only 219 students under suspension. Jansen made it clear that not only students charged with crimes, but also habitual troublemakers should be expelled.

This represented a stiffer approach than was indicated when the Board of Education authorized the new move yesterday.

The action brought into immediate and sharp focus the problem of what to do with the ousted pupils.

Mayor Robert Wagner said he was conferring with other city officials about finding some "temporary facilities" that could be made available to handle suspended pupils.

Wagner appealed for more help from parents in coping with the situation.

JUNGLE LAW SEEN FOR SOME SCHOOLS

Judge in Brooklyn Calls for Drastic Action in Sending 5 Teen-Agers to Jail

A Brooklyn judge warned yesterday that if drastic action was not taken immediately the law of the jungle would prevail in some of the city's public schools.

County Judge George J. Joyce gave the warning in sentencing five youths found guilty of firing two shotgun blasts that wounded three other youths in a gang fight.

"This was a typical gang fight," Judge Joyce said. "It involved a fight for control of not only the neighborhood, but also control of one of our junior high schools and the use of the community center which is housed in the school building [Francis Scott Key Junior High School, Kent and Willoughby Avenues].

"It is a sad commentary, really a disgrace, that in our fair city principals, teachers and decent, upright pupils look to each day with fear and trepidation, wondering whether the coming day will bring a clobbering, an assault or a rape."

He then mentioned the grand jury investigation of school crime.

Asks Action

"It may be that the jury can fix the blame, for blame there is. But the time is coming, and coming fast, when some jury or authority must take drastic action if the city does not want some of these schools run and operated by the law of the jungle.

"It used to be there were three R's—reading, writing and arithmetic. Now add the fourth R——rape."

Four of the defendants received indeterminate sentences They are James Thomas, 17 years old, 52 Clifton Place; Henry Scott, 16, of 630 Fulton Street; Leon Cherry, 16, of 163 St. Mark's Avenue, and Jerome Field, 17, of 423 Lafayette Avenue, all Brooklyn. The fifth defendant, Edwin Harden, 17, of 73 Clifton Place, Brooklyn, received a two-and-one-half to five-year sentence.

They all were sentenced to the Elmira Reception Center. A jury found them guilty of second-degree assault in the shooting, which occurred Sept. 17.

Harden was identified last Tuesday in a probation report read by Judge Samuel S. Leibowitz as the youth who had threatened to kill Sidney Gerschick, former assistant principal of the Francis Scott Key Junior High School.

SCHOOLS TO OUST LAW VIOLATORS, BEGINNING TODAY

Other Public Agencies Asked to 'Provide for Custody' of Students Facing Charges

COURT FEARS RESULT

Justice Says Children Will Be Sent Into Streets While Awaiting Trial

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

The Board of Education, in a drastic revision of policy, announced last night that pupils charged with violence or insubordination would be suspended at once.

Declaring that its duty was "to protect the innocent from the violent," the board asserted that "it is the duty of other public agencies to provide for custody of pupils having violent tendencies."

The board's decision, which takes effect today, was made at a three-hour executive session. It came after a running debate among school and civic authorities, parents and teachers agencies, court officials and a Kings County grand jury over how to handle a recent flare of violence.

The board's statement said:

"Resolved, that it is the policy of the Board of Education that any pupil who shall be charged with a violation of law involving violence or insubordination shall be forthwith suspended from regular school attendance Such suspension shall not be revoked unless the pupil is found not guilty by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Instruction Impossible

"In establishing this policy, which is a departure from previous policy, the board made it clear that it recognizes that in such cases under existing conditions, no instruction can be provided for such pupils.

"In this connection the board points out that it has a duty to protect the innocent from the violent and that it is the duty of other public agencies to provide for custody of pupils having violent tendencies."

All members of the board were present at the meeting except Charles H. Silver, president, and the Rev. Dr. John M. Coleman, who has been ill.

Street Influence Feared

John Warren Hill, presiding justice of the Domestic Relations Court, said last night that he had no quarrel with the board's decision.

"Their problems are so serious they have no doubt come to the boiling point," Justice Hill said. But he declared that the decision meant that judges would have to send delinquent children "right out into the street" until their cases are decided.

In the streets, and barred from school, the children may be subjected to greater temptations, grow angry and surly, and take out their spite against society, Justice Hill added.

Youth House, in the Bronx, is now the only place to which delinquent minors can be remanded for temporary custody pending hearing of their cases. It has therefore been the custom of justices in Children's Court to parole youthful offenders in the custody of their parents pending the hearing.

John W. Poe, director of Youth House, said last night it is filled to capacity. The house, in a new building at 1221 Spofford Street, is operated by the Youth Board, a private philanthropic agency with funds supplied by the city.

The new structure, opened Jan. 25 with a population of 222, was filled with 322 boys within nine days, and still has 310, Mr. Poe said.

"It was built for 250, and we thought it would take six months to a year to reach that," Mr. Poe said.

Correction Department View

A spokesman for the Department of Correction said his department could not be one of the "other public agencies" to whom the Board of Education referred the duty of providing custody for violent children.

The department's new Brooklyn Prison provides temporary custody only for persons 16 years and older, he said.

As for the Board of Education, Mrs. Cecile Ruth Sands said that "the courts will probably not parole them [violent pupils] if they find out they will be thrown into the streets."

She was asked whether nonviolent crimes, such as theft, were excluded as cause for suspension.

She replied that this had been discussed at the meeting, and that the decision had been made that the superintendent might use his discretion in the case of nonviolent crimes.

"In the present crisis, everything that needs to be covered" is covered by the working selected, Mrs. Sands said.

Earlier in the day, the Kings County grand jury that has been investigating violence in Brooklyn schools handed up another presentment.

It noted "with great interest" a previous program announced by the Board of Education to remedy the school situation, but said some of the recommendations "are by no means novel."

The grand jury called for prompt support for teachers and principals in the enforcement of discipline, "not mere promises of support."

The board's estimate that less than 1 per cent of the school's population consisted of problem children "is not too comforting a thought," the presentment said.

"This would mean that there are nearly 10,000 seriously aggressive and disruptive children in our public schools today who constitute a menace to the well-being of the remaining 99 per cent," the presentment continued.

The grand jury declared that its previous recommendation that policemen be stationed at dififcult schools had never been intended to be the final solution of the problem, which has "many facets."

It called for "prompt emergency action," however, to "clear out of our schools that 1 per cent who prevent the decent 99 per cent from getting the benefit of almost one-half billion dollars of our tax money spent by the Board of Education.

Judge Samuel S. Leibowitz, who ordered the investigation three months ago, commended the jury for devotion to duty "in spite of all the brickbats that have been aimed" at it

644 'violent' pupils ousted in New York

NEW YORK, Feb. 8—(AP)—The Board of Education's new policy of ousting "violent" students to "protect the innocent" resulted Friday in the suspension of at least 644 pupil . . s.

In elementary, junior and vocational high schools, 544 students were suspended. At least 100 others were suspended from academic high schools. This last figure, however, was incomplete because many of the schools operated sessions well into the afternoon and after the suspension total was released.

BOTH BOYS AND GIRLS were included in the ouster but the announcement gave no numerical breakdown by sex. Nor was a breakdown given by race. The suspensions presumably are for an indefinite period.

Formal suspension notices sent to parents of children involved state that the suspensions were effective "until further notice." They added:

"You will be informed of the time and place of the hearing when you will be given an opportunity to discuss this matter."

There are 800,000 students enrolled in the elementary, junior and vocational high schools. Before Friday, 219 students were on suspensions from these schools.

A parallel figure for academic high schools, where more than 150,000 students are enrolled, was not available.

The largest exodus was from Brooklyn, scene of many of the recent school rapes, stabbings and disorders in which both Negro and white students were involved.

Aside from academic high school students, 339 students were suspended in Brooklyn, 113 in Manhattan, 51 in the Bronx, 36 in Queens and 5 in Staten Island.

FRIDAY'S ACTION was a swift implementation of a decision taken by the Board of Education Thursday night. The board at that time adopted a resolution authorizing suspension of any pupils "charged with violation of law involving violence or insubordination."

Schools Supt. William Jensen, spelling out the categories of pupils to which the new policy applied, made no reference to an actual law violation as a precondition of suspension.

He said the policy would apply to any pupil with a record of serious and continuous misbehavior.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner Friday endorsed the new policy. He also assigned Ralph W. Whelan, director of the City Youth Board, to devote his full time to studying services provided by City agencies to delinquent youths.

The city has a $33,000,000 program for youths.

"I want him to speed it up," the mayor said. "I want it accelerated."

THE SCHOOL BOARD'S new policy on suspension was invoked despite a state compulsory education law, requiring schools to admit all children up to age 17 who are not in custodial institutions.

However, in Albany, State Education Commissioner James E. Allen said it was "very clear that there is present authority for school authorities "to do what they want to do."

He said the problem was "financial and administrative rather than none of law." He did not elaborate.

The action brought into immediate focus the problem of what to do with the ousted pupils.

CHARLES H. SILVER, president of the Board of Education, said he had visited Ellis Island and Hoffman Island, both in New York Harbor, three years ago with a view to obtaining detention facilities for delinquent children but that he had been unable to get them.

He suggested that the Willard Parker Hospital in Manhattan, which is vacant, might be modernized and used for the suspended children.

WAGNER SAID he was conferring with other city officials about finding some "temporary facilities" that could be made available to handle suspended pupils.

In some cases in the past, students convicted of delinquency in court have been sent back to school because there was no room for them in juvenile institutions.

FACILITIES FOR remanding delinquents either temporarily or for long terms are so overcrowded that the courts put them on parole, or probation, or suspend sentence and they return to school.

The board's new policy was protested by organizations of parents, teachers and child welfare experts.

UPILS DENOUNCE MASS SUSPENSIONS

Parley Finds Delinquency 'Grossly' Exaggerated

A conference of West Side pupils yesterday opposed the wholesale suspension of accused delinquents from the public schools.

Representatives of eleven public, private and three parochial schools rejected with virtually no floor discussion the new policy of the Board of Education. They deplored also "negative publicity" in recent news stories as "exaggerating grossly the problem of delinquency in New York City."

They suggested that parents give more of their time and interest to their children, regardless of economic status. They urged the parents to share activities and "talk things over" with their children.

More than 250 pupils, from 14 to 17 years old, held the conference at the Walden School, 1 West Eighty-eighth Street. Their general questions came under the heading "The Teen-Ager Looks at His Community." The Riverside Neighborhood Assembly sponsored the conference.

Stanley H. Lowell, president of the assembly and first assistant to Mayor Wagner, told the conference he was "deeply concerned" over the policy of automatic suspension by the school authorities.

He said he felt strongly that the board's policy was not in accord with the American tradition of avoiding punishment "before the facts are actually determined." He emphasized that a presumption of innocence should apply when pupils were charged with law violations.

School Competition Scored

Panel participants noted that discrimination and prejudice could not be eradicated without "changed attitudes" in the home.

They deplored stress on competition and marks in secondary schools as not valid indications of a good education. They urged "a good general high school" on the West Side, rather than "the present situation which results in severe anxieties over competition for admission into the special high schools." They referred to the Bronx High School of Science and the High School of Music and Arts.

The panelists critciized emphasis on science courses at the expense of the humanities. They recommended the creation of a pupil exchange program with Puerto Rican secondary schools. They urged also improvements in recreation center programs.

Morris C. Finkel, assistant superintendent of schools, reported that the school population in the area from Fifty-ninth to 110th Street, from the Hudson River to Central Park, totaled about 17,540. Of these, 47 per cent were identified as Puerto Rican in origin, 38 per cent white and 15 per cent Negro.

A stabilization of the area's population in the last three years was noted, reportedly bringing a halt to the flight of middle-class families to the suburbs.

In housing a rehabilitation study is going forward in the area bounded by Eighty-seventh to Ninety-seventh Street, Central Park West and Amsterdam Avenue. A Federally aided slum clearance project is in the preliminary planning stage for the area bounded by Eighty-third to Eighty-sixth Street, Riverside Drive and Amsterdam Avenue.

945 Students Suspended In NYC

NEW YORK, Feb. 27 (AP) — The school system has reported it has suspended 945 pupils since it started cracking down on troublemakers Feb. 7.

It also announced it is opening two special schools Monday for the gradual return of most of the 813 still under suspension.

Supt. of Schools William Jansen told a news conference that 87 of the suspended pupils have been permitted to return to regular classes and that 47 have left the schools.

The 47 have either moved from the city, transferred to private schools, got married, or obtained working papers.

There was no breakdown of the figures by race.

Both white and Negro children were involved in disorders and hoodlumism that led to the crackdown by the board of education. The school troubles included two rape cases and the suicide of the principal of one of the schools involved.

The school board has contended that less thar one per cent of the city's almost one million public school children are in the troublesome category.

The special schools for the hard core cases will be located in school buildings now vacant.

Board of Education today held out hope of reinstatement to some of 644 public school students suspended as trouble makers in last week's classroom purge. All will get hearings.

After an emergency City Hall conference, an announcement said the Board of Education did not rule out the possibility that some of the cases presently under suspension might be returned to the regular school.

"Severity of the offenses, attitudes of the individual child and the measure of cooperation which the home is able and willing to provide will be important determining factors in such cases," the announcement said.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner meanwhile scheduled a Wednesday conference with Gov. Averell Harriman on additional institutions for incorrigibles among the city's nearly one million public school students.

These could take the form of temporary "600 schools," the numerical designation for a small group of city schools that concentrate on problem students. In addition, the city seeks added state custodial institutions for trouble makers beyond the control of the school system.

The mayor and the governor are Democrats. Sitting in with them will be top aides in the fields of education, social welfare and youth activities.

Harriman said yesterday he is willing to work with the city in a "crash" program against lawlessness in the city schools.

New York School Problems—

New York's Social Problem Equals Anything South Faces

By AL KUETTNER
United Press Staff Writer

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—The people of New York City have a social problem that equals anything the South faces in that region's agonizing struggle over race relations.

You cannot in honesty find that actual racial conflict is causing the rampage of juvenile delinquency in the schools of the nation's largest city.

You cannot but admit that Negroes, white children and Puerto Ricans get along amiably in their classes.

It's certainly apparent that the administration of Mayor Robert Wagner is determined to make this even more of an "open city" for all races and that he has no serious opposition in his plans.

Real Trouble

But there is trouble here, real trouble, and the race issue is at least partly to blame. You find that out by simple arithmetic. The non-white population of New York has increased 41 per cent in seven years. For Puerto Ricans the gain is 97 per cent.

Most of these people live under sub-standard to poverty conditions. Most of the crimes are committed in these neighborhoods by the inhabitants therein. Figure it out for yourself.

One of this city's foremost school officials—one incidentally who favors continuation of integrated schools—expressed the feeling privately that the Negro leadership is "failing miserably" to improve the moral and social standards of the Negroes.

Is New York trying to "cover up" race friction as the real trouble in its public schools? The United Press brought its Atlanta bureau manager, a Southerner born and reared, to New York to try to find an objective answer. This is the first of three articles.

This factor is one you hear repeatedly in the South — that Negroes are not ready for integration culturally or socially. But it was the first time I had heard it expressed here.

Other Side Is Grim

New York's 910,000 Negroes and 550,000 Puerto Ricans include thousands who have found good jobs and are making a contribution to the city's economy. More than 100 public school teachers, for example, are native Puerto Ricans. The garment industry would be seriously hurt if all the islanders here returned home. The restaurant, entertainment and hotel businesses employ Negro and Puerto Rican workers in droves.

But the other side of the picture is grim.

A considerable area of metropolitan New York is a ghetto populated by Negroes and Puerto Ricans of low economic status and high reproduction rate.

There is no waiting period for welfare department relief in New York. This is a sore point in the minds of taxpayers who object to paying the bills for care, and later the education, of these products of the slums who have migrated here from distant places.

I had a lengthy discussion with the mayor of New York.

Wagner is not one to blame the city's juvenile crime wave—which incidentally he feels is exaggerated — on the influx of non-white groups. He believes the trouble is due mainly to family breakdown and crowded housing conditions.

He also thinks the city is fortunate to have its huge Negro and Puerto Rican population.

"The size of New York requires that we have a tremendous work force," Wagner said. "In former years other ethnic groups provided that force—Germans, Poles, Irish. Today most of those have moved up the economic ladder and I feel we are fortunate that other groups have come to the city to take their places. Now, it happens to be Negroes and Puerto Ricans."

Product of Schools

Wagner himself is a product of the New York public school system and grew up in a section where the gangs were fighting. But he, too, moved up the economic scale and now his two sons go to private schools.

I asked him about this in view of some caustic feelings in the South about liberal Northerners who pay only lip service to integration.

He said his youngest son attends parochial school—Wagner is a devout Catholic—and the older boy goes to a private school "which he selected because his friends are there." He insisted it had nothing to do with race problems or the trouble in the New York schools.

Dr. William Jansen, New York public school superintendent, attributes the city's much publicized school problems to the theory that "New York has more of the best and more of the worst because it just has more of everybody."

BIRTHPLACE OF TROUBLE—In settings such as this throughout Harlem, Manhattan's Lower East Side and in Brooklyn the germs of juvenile delinquency are nurtured. New York youngsters seem to prefer alleyway gatherings like this to organized youth groups.

—UP Teleph

Dr. Jansen and his assistant, Clare C. Baldwin, are in charge of the education of almost one million children. Both men deny that the integration of races is a deterrent to good education.

"Negroes go through the top of the IQ (intelligence quotient) tests and they go through the bottom—just like every other group," Jansen said.

"New York is no different from any other city. Our areas of low economic standards produce most of our crime and most of our school delinquency. But we have found that retardation among those in similar economic status, regardless of race, is almost identical."

Subway Poster

New York is trying to do something about its child delinquency problem. Right now, to the tune of 4.5 million dollars, a highly efficient City Youth Board is blanketing the city with rehabilitation programs, contacts with schools, personal help to straying youngsters.

One of the first things I saw when I came here for this assignment was a subway poster put there by the youth board. It read: "Are you too old to listen to kid stuff? When family life stops, delinquency starts." Under prodding of Baldwin, a four-year study was conducted to determine what the schools can do to help culturally deprived children to compensate for their environmental handicaps.

The study was made of an equal number of Negro and white children. It determined that most of those observed had never experienced many normal childhood patterns, some didn't even know when they were born, they questioned their own self worth, were distrustful of adults and responded "with trigger-like reactions to apparently minor frustrations."

NY School Problem Aggravated By Race Issue, Southerner Finds

New York Teacher Lives In Fear After Anonymous Threat On Life

NEW YORK, Feb. 14 (AP) — A white teacher claimed today that a handful of trouble-makers have spread lawlessness through a virtually segregated Negro junior high school. He said he, himself, has received a death threat.

The school, P. S. 40, is in a run-down, crime-infested Negro section of South Jamaica in Queens. Its 1003 students are 98 per cent Negro, since the school draws from an almost solidly Negro area.

The teacher, Robert Barbarash, said he lives in fear of young toughs in his classroom. He added that conditions would be worse except that Principal Sherwood P. Friedman is a strict disciplinarian.

Barbarash showed police an anonymous letter mailed to him at school. Printed on it in immature hand was the following:

"Don't go to school Feb. 17 if you want to stay alive."

There also was a scribbled message "BB equals head equals death," and a Feb. 7 clipping from the Long Island Press.

Barbarash said he hasn't decided yet whether to defy the warning and go to school Monday. He added that he, his wife and his baby daughter have been promised police protection.

The newspaper clipping and the BB reference pertain to an incident last month. Barbarash said a hidden sniper nicked him in the ear with an air rifle outside P. S. 40.

The 27-year-old teacher brought charges against four Negro students he accused of having a hand in the shooting. Three of them were cleared in Children's Court and the other is free pending a June hearing.

In the clipping, Barbarash was quoted by the press:

"The fact that those kids were cleared means that the young toughs in the school will think they can get away with just anything. Conditions will get worse. You can't help feeling that they're plotting something new to gain revenge for my pressing charges."

Barbarash said he believed he was shot at by a boy whom he flunked last year. He added that the death threat is an apparent outgrowth of the prosecution of the four boys.

N. Y. Schools Head Asks Outside Aid

Defending Ouster Of Hoodlums, Board President Would Call On Foundations

NEW YORK, Feb. 16 (AP) — Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, proposed today that the city enlist the aid of private foundations to help solve the troubled public school situation.

Silver, in a speech before the Jewish Teachers Assn., at the same time defended the suspension a week ago last Friday of 644 unruly pupils from the schools.

The action, Silver said, "was intended to protect the innocent from the violent," adding: "We realize that this action and the future care of this 'hard core' group in custodial facilities is only the first step in the direction of the eventual solution to the board problem of juvenile delinquency."

In connection with foundation aid, Silver said: "I propose that we enlist the aid of foundations interested in education to collaborate with us in conducting whatever further studies are necessary to uncover the roots of the problem and to recommend the measures required."

Rapes, knifings, assaults and general lawlessness by about 1 per cent of the city's one million school children led to suspension of the problem children and the stationing of police in about 40 schools. Both Negro and white younsters have been involved in crime in the city's integrated school system.

Silver's suggestion for foundation help was similar to a proposal made a week ago by State Sen. Walter J. Mahoney, Republican majority leader. Mahoney said he was considering legislation to provide matching funds with the city for a survey of the school problem by a private agency such as the Carnegie Foundation.

An agreement was reached last week to renovate four old school buildings and put them to use as special schools. According to Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Gov. Averell Harriman, these schools will be ready in about a month. The city already has five special schools for problem children.

In discussing New York's school problem today on a television program Stanley H. Lowell, administrative assistant to Mayor Wagner, said rumors have been circulated among city officials that a planned Senate subcommittee hearing "may be out to prove that we have a Spanish problem or a Negro problem in our schools."

If such proves to be the case, Lowell said, "we are going to invite them out."

Also on the program was Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.). Should the committee try to pinpoint any local problems, Celler said, "I am going to do everything I can to stop it in Washington."

Celler said such committees lack the authority to probe local situations unless the federal government is planning to give federal aid.

Death Note Revealed by N.Y. Teacher

NEW YORK, Feb. 14 (AP) — A white teacher claimed today that a handful of troublemakers have spread lawlessness through a virtually segregated Negro junior high school. He said he himself has received a death threat.

The school, P.S. 40, is in a run-down, crime-infested Negro section of South Jamaica in Queens. Its 1,003 students are 98 per cent Negro, since the school draws from an almost solidly Negro area.

The 27-year-old teacher brought charges against four Negro students he accused of having a hand in the shooting. Three of them were cleared in Children's Court and the other is free pending a June hearing.

HANDFUL TROUBLESOME

In the clipping, Barbarash was quoted by the Press:

"The fact that those kids were cleared means that the young toughs in the school will think they can get away with just anything. Conditions will get worse. You can't help feeling that they're plotting something new to gain revenge for my pressing charges."

Barbarash said he believed he was shot at by a boy whom he flunked last year. He added that the death threat is an apparent outgrowth of the prosecution of the four boys.

The teacher claimed acts of violence almost every day are sparked by a handful of troublemakers who harass teachers and other students.

GENERAL LAWLESSNESS

Rapes, knifings, assaults and general lawlessness by a small minority of the city's one million public school children have thrown New York into a turmoil in recent weeks. They involved both Negro and white students in the 900-school integrated public school system.

Police have been stationed in about 40 schools, and last week 644 troublemakers were turned out of classrooms in a mass suspension of delinquents.

A Brooklyn grand jury is probing the school situation, which hitherto has appeared most serious in that borough. A junior high school principal committed suicide last month after the grand jury called on him for information about his trouble-beset school.

A series of city and state conferences are under way to arrange for more special schools for problem children and more correctional space for juvenile lawbreakers.

GEROSA QUESTIONS PLAN FOR SCHOOLS

With Many Not Filled, Why Build New Ones? He Asks

Controller Lawrence E. Gerosa advocated yesterday that the city's school construction program be reviewed, because "a lot of schools are not crowded."

"That has worried me a long time," he said. "I admit there are crowded schools, but we're building a lot of schools and finding vacancies in a lot of other places. I want to know why."

He added that "pressure groups are the people that come in and say they must have another school when there is a near-by school that has vacancies." He did not elaborate.

Mr. Gerosa reiterated his opposition to Mayor Wagner's proposal—now before the Legislature—to give the city power to borrow $500,000,000 outside its debt limit to build new schools.

Mr. Gerosa pointed out that in 1937 there was a registration of 1,141,268 in the city's schools, while in 1957, the figure was 940,000. Since 1946, he said, 314 schools were built or modernized.

If a study of the school construction program were proposed before the Board of Estimate, he would vote for it, the Controller declared.

He said the program required careful planning because of population shifts. Areas needing more schools today might not need them in years to come, he declared.

Mr. Gerosa was interviewed on the television program "Citizen's Searchlight" over WRCA-TV.

"One study I've made," he said, "and it shows that what we need are more teachers and textbooks."

Asked about the 1958 Cadillac limousine the city has ordered for him Mr. Gerosa said:

"I would use a small car myself, but if all the officials have new Cadillacs, I would be out of line."

To a question whether he would favor the use of second-hand Cadillacs, he replied: "You're in a first-rate city. You'd look terrible with a second-hand car."

He said he would favor the use of small cars, "but not right now," adding: "What are they going to do with all those big cars?"

After the program, Mr. Gerosa said that although he might disagree with the Mayor on some matters, they were "the best of friends."

Trouble Grows In Brooklyn . . . No. 3—

Racial Aspects Minimized In School Violence

By Scripps-Howard Newspapers

NEW YORK, Feb. 20—What can be done about the terror gripping many Brooklyn schools?

Though scores of schools have been untouched by the wave of violence and delinquency, there have been many instances of teen-age hoodlums beating up fellow pupils, assaulting teachers and turning classes into nightmares.

Seeking suggestions to cure the situation, reporters for the New York World-Telegram and Sun interviewed numerous teachers, principals, parents, police and pupils themselves.

Their suggestions generally followed these lines:

—The schools should enforce stricter discipline. A high police official expressed this view privately. His words were echoed by parents and persons whose homes and stores are near schools.

—The schools should be given more money to provide additional facilities for the handful of real troublemakers among students. Principals and teachers generally backed this view.

—The Police Dept. should be given at least 4000 more men so that additional officers can be assigned to trouble neighborhoods.

—More correctional institutions should be set up. Teachers said scores of delinquents are sent back to classrooms because detention facilities are so overcrowded that judges have nowhere else to send them.

—Any crackdown on delinquent youngsters must be accompanied by stepped-up efforts to prosecute adult offenders. Some teachers saw little chance for increased respect for law and order as long as leaders of the Mafia and other gangsters can hold conventions and carry on their rackets with apparent impunity.

Racial aspects of Brooklyn's delinquency picture were generally minimized by both educators and police.

One white patrolman conceded that white policemen lean over backward to avoid bias charges over undue toughness to Negro youths. Negro officers, however, "won't take any guff from a Negro child," he said.

"The children know it and move along when they see a Negro policeman coming."

But teachers and police say that in the few instances where crime follows racial lines, it is merely reflecting tensions among adults in changing neighborhoods.

Some steps already have been taken by school officials, but one junior high school principal said the following steps would be basic to any genuine improvement in troubled schools:

—Improve teaching personnel by higher salaries that will attarct more and better teachers.

—Remove dved-in-the-wool troublemakers from their regular schools and put them in "special" schools where they can be handled. (The School Board reversed its former policy and expelled all students accused of violence until such time as they are cleared in court.)

—Find a way to hold parents legally responsible for a child's misdeeds.

—Tighten up relief laws to end a situation in which boys of 17 and 18 who dislike school remain there anyway because this permits their parents to collect relief money which they would not get if the boy were working.

School officials say the delinquents constitute only one per cent of the population of Brooklyn schools. But teachers say even that amount is more than enough to "disrupt our entire balance."

One principal explained:

"This is because the delinquents require so much administrative and guidance time that little attention is given to the normal children."

There are stirrings in Brooklyn now, fortunately, that should lead to vastly improved conditions.

2d Girl, 13, Is Raped At a Brooklyn School

Another thirteen-year-old has been raped on school grounds in Brooklyn, and a sixteen-year-old youth was arraigned yesterday as her alleged assailant.

The latest rape victim—the second in a week—was att acked about 8:15 o'clock Tuesday evening on an outside stairway leading to the open rear courtyard of P. S. 20, an elementary school at 225 Adelphi St., in the Navy Yard section.

This is several miles from John Marshall Junior High School (P. S. 210) at Park Place and Rochester Ave., in the Crown Heights section, where a thirteen-year-old student there was raped on Jan. 21 during school hours. A fifteen-year-old truant was picked up and then released in that crime, which is believed to have contributed toward the suicide on Tuesday of the junior high school's principal.

Late yesterday Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy, saying "There is no change in our policy," announced that policemen have been stationed outside thirteen Brooklyn public schools and on an "in-and-out" basis at two other Brooklyn public schools.

The two where the officers will work in and out of the school are John Marshall Junior High School and, as of yesterday, Junior High School 258, at 141 Macon St.

The commissioner was asked if there was any change in department policy, or any compromise with the special Kings County Grand Jury's demand that police be assigned to "difficult schools. He said:

"There is no change in our policy. It is the same as in the past. A rekuest was made and we acceded to it. We have done this before on a local basis."

Standard department procedure, it was explained, is to assign a policeman to duty outside a school on the recommendation of a precinct captain, and to inside on the request of a school principal.

The thirteen schools which now have a fixed outside police post—with the officer making an occasional visit inside—are:

Mark Twain Junior High School (P. S. 239).
James Madison High School.
Lafayette High School.
George Washington Vocational High School.
Tilden High School.
Thomas Jefferson High School.
Junior High School 263.
Junior High School 166.
Junior High School 57.
Junior High School 73.
Public School 87.
Public School 90.
Public School 111.

Neither the latest rape victim nor her alleged assailant are students at P. S. 20, it was emphasized. They were there Tuesday evening for extra-school activity operated by the Board of Education's Bureau of Community Education to keep children off the streets and out of trouble. The school is only six and a half years old and not considered a problem school.

A policeman on fixed post outside the school heard the girl's screams. Patrolman John Capobianco, of the Classon Ave. Precinct, ran into the courtyard and at the bottom of a stairwell leading to a rarely used basement he collared strapping Peter White, of 384 Cumberland St., Brooklyn, a third-year student at Boys High School, Brooklyn.

The girl, near by, was hysterical. She was rushed to Cumberland Hospital, where doctors reported that she had been raped and that she was suffer- White was held in $10,000 bail in Brooklyn Adolescent Court by Magistrate John R. Starkey for a hearing Monday.

Miss Dolores Chitraro, the school's principal, who has nothing to do with the evening activity at the building, said "it was a good thing" that the police officer was on the outside of the school and not inside at the time of the attack.

Not Heard Inside

Otherwise, she noted, the chances were good that nobody would have heard the girl's creams. Se pointed out that either the teacher in charge f the evening activitv, identified as Boston Chase, and four civilian adults assisting him, had heard any commotion. They were all in the school at the time along with thirty children.

Miss Chitraro, who supervises 1,430 students in the day classes which go up to the sixth grade, emphasized that the crime did not occur in the school proper, although on school grounds. She said that she had received innumerable phone calls yesterday from parents of students at the school, wondering whether it was safe to send their children to classes. The Kings County grand jury has raised that question for "difficult" schools, demanding a police officer in each.

Miss Chitraro advised parents that what had happened had nothing to do with the school proper—at least its day program—and as a result attendance yesterday was considered normal.

The latest rape victim was said to attend a public school a short distance from P. S. 20, which is a neat, exceptionally clean school, with a mixed student enrollment.

The rape was only one of several untoward incidents in Brooklyn Tuesday night.

Windows Smashed

At P. S. 12, another elementary school at 123 Adelphi St., only two blocks from P. S. 20, fifteen windows were broken between 4 p. m. Tuesday and 8 a. m. yesterday. Police believed that young hoodlums from the neighborhood were responsible, using rocks. Nobody was arrested immediately.

At 9 p. m. Tuesday, police, acting on a tip, descended on two gangs of youths preparing for a rumble at Classon Ave. and Lincoln Place, on the fringe of the Bedford-Stuyvesant section. They picked up twenty-one youths on charges of unlawful assembly.

Police found thta these boys' activity consisted of carrying an array of weapons ranging from wrenches, link chains, clubs, bottles and auto antennas, which are also good for conversion to zip guns.

Find 8-Inch Bread Knife

Fifteen of the hoodlums were held in $5,000 bail each in Brooklyn Adolescent Court, and six, under the age of sixteen, were referred to Children's Court for investigation. One of the fifteen, James Kehoe, sixteen, of 820 Classon Ave., Brooklyn, was also charged with possession of a dangerous weapon—an eight-inch bread knife.

In the same court yesterday, record bail of $50,000 was set for two teen-age boys arrested on Tuesday immediately after the stabbing and attempted robbery of two high school girls at Fulton St. and Franklin Ave., Brooklyn. The boys were Robert Lamar, seventeen, of 39A Irving Place, and Samuel Finlayson, sixteen, of 86 Quincy St., Brooklyn.

They were charged with attempted robbery. The victims of the attack, students at Bishop McDonnell High School, were reported in good condition in Kings County Hospital. Three other boys who figured in this crime were under sixteen and were referred to Children's Court.

The two girls, Sharon Gallagher, fifteen, an Katharine Guilfoyle, seventeen, suffered superficial back wounds.

2 BROTHERS HELD IN SCHOOL ATTACK

Times P. 18

Assistant Principal Beaten on East Side While Trying to Stop Brawl by Pupils

New York N.Y.

Two brothers were arrested yesterday on charges of assaulting an assistant principal who tried to break up a fight near his school.

Thomas Caetan, 50 years old, is assistant principal of Public School 97 at 135 Mangan Street, on the Lower East Side. He was on his way to lunch yesterday when he stopped to intervene in the fight.

Students from his school and from near-by Public School 188, a junior high school at 133 Lewis Street, were battling in a lot. Mr. Caetan sent a pupil to summon the police and broke into the fight.

The interrupted battlers rushed at Mr. Caetan and hit him with snowballs. He lost his footing in the snow.

"They beat me, knocked me down, kicked me in the stomach and shins and ponded me," Mr. Caetan said.

Vivaldo Roman, 17, at home from Haaren High School because of a cold, saw the fight from his apartment window, and ran downstairs.

"I looked out of the window and I see the principal hitting Victor, and he's my brother, so I go down and help him," Vivaldo said. He did not know Mr. Caetan was a principal, he said.

Police arrived as Vivaldo, trying to free his 14-year-old brother from Mr. Caetan's grasp, pushed the assistant principal into the snow. The two boys were arersted and taken to the Clinton Street station.

Vivaldo was booked for felonious assault and held overnight for arraignment today in Adolescent Court.

Victor said he was just passing the group when Mr. Caetan slapped his face and grabbed him.

Mr. Caetan's right leg was bruished and he received a deep scratch on the left hand. He refused medical aid.

The police are looking for other boy involved in the fight.

15-year-old Negro boy raped a 13-year-old white girl in the basement of a Brooklyn junior high school today.

The girl, an eighth grade student at John Marshall High School, was taken to a hospital in a state of shock.

Police seized a youth, believed to be a student also, shortly after the incident and held him at the hospital for possible identification by the girl when her condition permitted.

Police withheld their names because of their ages.

A Board of Education spokesman said the girl was sent by her teacher to the cafeteria on the school's ground floor for a bottle of milk. She was accosted by the youth who forced her at knifepoint to accompany him to the basement.

STATE AID STUDIED IN EFFORT TO EASE CITY SCHOOL CRISIS

Governor Says Money and Work Program May Be Needed to Curb Crime

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

Governor Harriman announced yesterday that he and other state officials would examine New York's school needs to see whether additional state aid was required to help the city out of its current school crisis.

With Mayor Wagner sitting beside him and occasionally speaking, the Governor explained agreements reached at a conference at his town house.

The conference lasted two and a half hours. It was attended by eighteen other state and city officials, including the state Commissioners of Education, Welfare, Labor and Mental Hygiene.

Mayor Wagner said that four additional schools for problem children would be opened within a month in buildings now vacant or nearly vacant.

To Have Special Staff

"They might be a little makeshift at the beginning," he said, "but they will be euipped with shops and special staff."

Abraham D. Beame, city Budget Director, who attended the meeting, said afterward that the city would "just have to find the money" for the new special schools. "It is the most important objective the Mayor has at the moment," Mr. Beame added.

Governor Harriman said there might have to be a special appropriation or supplemental budget to provide the city with additional school funds.

He declined to comment on the decision of the Board of Education to suspend more than 644 pupils charged with violence or insubordination last Friday.

Issue Not Discussed

"That is the city's affair," and was not discussed at the conference, the Governor said.

The conference was called to explore ways of helping the city to cope with a wave of juvenile violence that has been under investigation by a Kings County Grand Jury. The situation reached a climax with the mass suspensions Friday.

Among the proposals advanced at the meeting, and reported afterward by Mr. Harriman, was a "work-activity program."

Such a program might be developed with the cooperation of the Department of Labor and with unions, under the supervision of the State Department of Education, the Governor said.

He emphasized that he was opposed to lowering the age limit for education or changing the Child Labor Law.

He quoted State Education Commmissioner James E. Allen Jr. as believing that a new school-work program in which a student might be permitted to work part-time could be prepared without changing the law.

"Whatever would be done would be within the school law and under the supervision of the schools," Mr. Harriman said.

He added that Commissioner Allen and the city's Superintendent of Schools, Dr. William Jansen, had agreed to try to develop a work activity program.

Dr. Jansen, who attended the conference, is to meet with Commissioner Allen and other state education fficials Friday.

Governor Harriman said it was possible that the city was entitled to state aid for its special classes for problem children.

Special Cost Noted

He said Dr. Jansen had reported that the cost was $600 for a student in the special schools, against $400 in regular schools.

The Governor said he would explore whether "it is appropriate for the state to bear a share of that cost."

Mayor Wagner said it would probably cost the city $125,000 to get each of four special schools in shape, "and we may have to use more money for rehabilitation of the buildings."

He said it had been agreed at the conference that Ellis Island, which has frequently been proposed for the special schools, "is not appropriate" and would be too expensive to remodel.

The four additional schools would accommodate 600 to 800 students, the Mayor said.

Staff Is Available

An official of the Board of Education said later that the staff could be recruited quickly from among the 40,000 regular staff teachers. Many with special training for handling problem children are teaching classes that do not require that special skill, he said. They would receive a bonus of $480 annuall for teaching the special classes.

Mr. Harriman said the state had agreed at the conference to review the need for an increase in facilities at state training schools to which delinquents are sent by court order.

Local officials have maintained that much of the violence in the schools is perpetrated by children who belong in state training schools but who have not been sent there because there was no room.

It has also been maintained that many children are released too early from the state institutions and immediately get into trouble again.

Governor Harriman said yesterday that there was a difference of opinion about how long the children should be kept in the institutions.

Expansion to Be Studied

The state will investigate the possibility of leasing or purchasing additional facilities, as well as the possible expansion of existing training schools, Mr. Harriman promised.

STATE WARNS CITY IN SCHOOL CRISIS; CALLS A MEETING

Allen Asserts Board Must Provide Instruction for All Students It Suspends

3 AIDES TO SEE JANSEN

Albany Official Notes Law on Compulsory Education 'Cannot Be Rescinded'

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

The State Education Department moved into New York's troubled school situation yesterday.

Dr. James E. Allen Jr., State Commissioner of Education, designated two assistant commissioners and the department's legal counsel to confer early in the week with Dr. William Jansen, City Superintendent of Schools.

At the same time he let it be known that the city school board was still legally responsible for instruction of the students that were suspended en masse on Friday.

Dr. Allen telegraphed Dr. Jansen yesterday requesting the conference to determine "what the state can do to assist in expediting a constructive solution to your suspended pupil problem."

No Inquiry Planned

In a telephone interview, Dr. Allen said at Albany that no "investigation" was contemlated.

"This is just an exploratory move to see what can be done," he said.

The State Commissioner declared emphatically, however, that "the state's compulsory education law is still in effect and cannot be rescinded by them any more than by me."

That law, he warned, requires the Board of Education to provide some alternate instruction program for the more than 644 pupils who were suspended Friday.

The pupils were suspended under a new policy adopted by the board on Thursday. Aroused by criticisms of a recent wave of adolescent violence, the board ordered the suspension "forthwith" of any pupil "charged with a violation of law involving violence or insubordination."

Because of inadequate special training and detention facilities, it was conceded by all concerned that many of the pupils barred from the schools would be thrown into the streets.

The board said, however, in announcing its new policy on ...sday that "it is the duty ...her public agencies to provide for custody of pupils having violent tendencies."

Dr. Allen said yesterday that the board had a right to suspend the delinquents, but that to do so did not relieve it of responsibility for them.

The only situation in which the board is freed of its duty to provide training for all under 17 years old, he said, arises when a court orders a pupil committed to an institution on the basis of his acts.

If the city should fail to provide an educational program for difficult pupils who are suspended but not committed by the courts, it would be the Commissioner's duty to order the board to comply with the education law, Dr. Allen said. No such step is being contemplated now, he added.

The State Education Department has financial, administrative and legislative interests in the city school administration.

About 40 per cent of the schools' cost is contributed by the state. The Department of Education is the executive arm of the Board of Regents, which sets standards and policy for all education, public and private, in the state, except at West Point. The department also presents the education budget to the Governor and the Legislature and sponsors legislative action.

Commissioner's Powers Cited

The Commissioner of Education also has judicial powers. Civic groups or parents who might appeal any of the recent suspensions could choose to be heard by the Commissioner instead of the courts, and his decision would be final.

Dr. Allen referred yesterday to section 3214 of the State Education Law in reminding that the board retained responsibility for instructing the suspended pupils.

That section provides that the Board of Education may send school delinquents to special day schools, "parental" schools that provide twenty-four-hour-a-day custodial care. Or, by agreement, delinquents may be sent to private institutions.

The law states further:

"In the case of a minor who is suspended as insubordinate or disorderly, immediate steps shall be taken for his commitment, as provided in this section, or for his attendance upon instruction elsewhere; in the case of a minor suspended for other cause, the suspension may be revoked whenever it appears to be for the best interest of the school and the minor to do so."

The Commissioner said that lowering the age at which youths might leave school to go to work would not free the board of responsibility.

Age Must Be Considered

"As long as they are of school age, the board has responsibility for them," he said.

The board may permit pupils to work before they reach 17, but it must see that "it is the right job and an educational experience," Dr. Allen said.

Peter Campbell Brown, City Corporation Counsil, and an assistant, Leo Larkin, were invited to attend a meeting last Tuesday at which the Board of Education adopted a plan to remedy violence in the schools. Mr. Brown said yesterday he had not been invited to attend the meeting Thursday at which the decision was made to suspend unruly insubordinate children beginning Friday.

A spokesman for the Police Department said yesterday that the Board of Education had not given the police a list of the pupils suddenly suspended Friday. He added that there was liaison between school principals and precinct captains.

The "hard core of troublemakers" is already known to the police and is under observation," he said.

Two Queens Republicans announced they would introduce a resolution in the Legislature to set up a joint legislative "sweeping investigation" of the "general mess" in certain city schools. The sponsors are State Senator Walter McGahan of Bayside and Assemblyman Charles T. Eckstein of Ridgewood.

Why Is Eisenhower Silent About N. Y.?

Post Herald
Birmingham, Ala.

We all remember when General Eisenhower landed in the United States fresh from the victorious World War II. The Republican Party besieged him and urged him to run for President. He said he didn't know whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, that he was a soldier and not a statesman.

Well, we soon found out he was no part of a statesman. The Republican Party continued to urge, and the general was as cute, coy, and embarassed as a 16 year old who had her first proposal of marriage.

Nevertheless the Republicans took him over, secured his appointment as president of Columbia, gave the general a black and tan ointment shampoo, placed a perpetual smile on his visage, and handed to him a political token, "I like Ike." He received in the South a greater number of votes than any Republican I know of.

Did he appreciate it? Evidently he did not.

He did fairly well during his first term. It was his second term when he began his cutting up, and vividly displayed what was really pent up in the man.

His first act was to secure a unanimous vote by the United States Supreme Court to hand down an unconstitutional decision on integration. President Eisenhower held before Earl Warren, then governor of California, the glittering temptation of appointing him chief justice and this temptation caused Warren to turn a political somersault. Above his signature, as governor, appears this statement, "Local problems, however, whether they are on this or any other subject, should be dealt with by local government. We cannot hope or expect to have a vigorous democracy in America unless this is our firm policy." Warren was too weak to resist.

In view of what is happening in the New York city schools, I ask why has Mr. Eisenhower been as silent as a tombstone? Where are his federal guns and bayonets and why is he not using them as he did in Little Rock where only nine Negroes are involved?

Just why Eisenhower hates the South I do not know. But I say that any chief executive who is so narrow, and so little as to hate part of the American Union is not fit to be President of our great nation.

Those Northern Democrats and Northern Republicans, members of the House of Representatives were too dumb to look to the future. It is they who handed the North this problem. They were aiming their guns at the South but they were poor marksmen. Eisenhower and the Supreme Court are responsible for all the trouble that lies ahead.

640 Suspended Pupils Roam Streets

Delinquency Soars in N. Y. Schools; Debate Rages on Cause and Remedy

First of a Series

By Erwin Knoll
Staff Reporter

NEW YORK, Feb. 15—While more than 640 school children suspended on charges of "violence or insubordination," roam the streets of New York, educators and municipal officials search feverishly for means of coping with the crisis of juvenile delinquency in this city's schools.

New "crash programs" are proposed—and opposed—daily in the face of unprecedented public demand that "something be done."

Those who favor drastic steps against teen-age offenders and potential offenders are castigated for "hotheadedness" and "hysteria." Those who plead for an understanding approach to delinquents' problems find themselves characterized as "sob sisters" and "do-gooder."

The debate rages amidst new daily reports of violence in the schools—reports which now make front-page news across the country; complaints that education has virtually ceased in many classrooms paralyzed by "troublemakers"; sharp comments on New York schools in the halls of Congress, and preparations for a Senate investigation of the situation.

The spotlight fell on New York's education system late last month, when the principal of a Brooklyn junior high school leaped to his death after testifying before a special grand jury investigating violence in the schools. A week earlier a 13-year-old girl had been raped in the basement of a school by a 15-year-old youth.

Contributing to the sudden skyrocketing of public concern were blunt charges by the grand jury and its mentor, outspoken Kings County Judge Samuel S. Leibowitz, that school officials had been remiss in their duty—had failed to protect the innocent from the vicious.

But school teachers and administrators, now harassed as much by the public outcry as by the situation which brought it about, say the new wave of concern is somewhat overdue.

The "emergency" in the schools, they insist, is not of last month's making—or last year's. It has been developing for decades, during which pleas for public interest and support fell on deaf ears.

The emergency, they add, is not unique in New York. It exists in the nation's largest city on the largest scale. But it exists to a greater or lesser extent in every urban center, ready to erupt into headlines at any time under a combination of incidents similar to those which occurred in New York.

Reacting to the first wave of public indignation, the New York Board of Education took a drastic step 10 days ago. It summarily suspended more than 460 students who had been charged with violence or insubordination.

"It is the duty of other public agencies to provide for custody of pupils having violent tendencies," the Board declared—but almost immediately it began to retreat from that position.

The State of New York pointed out that the city still had the responsibility of providing for the education of the suspended students, and added that hearings would have to be held in every case to validate the suspensions. More than 30 assistant school superintendents were assigned to the task.

Two days ago the Board announced that the policy of suspending students first and deciding what to do with them later would end on April 1. The emergency is expected to have passed by then, the Board intimated.

But no one concerned about New York's schools expects the emergency to pass of its own accord—and few believe the suspensions have accomplished anything except focus public attention on the crisis.

Said Joseph C. Noethen, an assistant superintendent in the Brooklyn schools:

"The mass suspensions were a treatment of the symptoms and not the causes of the problem."

SENATORS TO STUDY NEW YORK VIOLENCE

Federal Aid Possible In Ending School Trouble

STAFF SETS UP SHOP

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—A special Senatesubcommittee on juvenile delinquency laid the groundwork Wednesday for an investigation of New York schools to determine whether the nation's biggest city needs Federal help in fighting classroom terror.

James Sullivan, chief counsel for the subcommittee, and a staff of four set up shop in offices in the Brooklyn Federal Courthouse. They kept a close watch on the turbulent school situation and arranged interviews with school officials, police, teenagers and parents of troublemakers as potential hearing witnesses.

Year Of Rampage

The committee moved in after the year-long rampage of juvenile delinquency in the schools reached a climax last Friday with the suspension of 644 of the most unruly pupils. The suspensions came after a series of criminal outbreaks in schools, including robberies, beatings and rapes, and the suicide of a principal who had been called to testify before a Grand Jury investigating schools.

Sullivan said the Senate is empowered to move in and help solve the crisis because a bill now is before it providing for the allocation of Federal funds to help states and communities fight juvenile delinquency.

The hearings here, probably to begin late this month, will help determine how much Federal help and what kind of help New York City needs, he said.

Detailed plans for the subcommittee's program here will be announced by Senator Thomas C. Hennings (D., Mo.), chairman of the group, who also conducted brief hearings on juvenile delinquency here last December.

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), who won fame as an investigator here in 1951 hearings on adult crime, will sit with Senator Hennings, Sullivan said. Senator Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.), also a member of the subcommittee, may attend, he said.

Will Listen To Judge

Sullivan said committee staff members would go to Judge Samuel S. Liebowitz' courtroom next Monday to listen to the noted authority on school problems sentence convicted juvenile delinquents.

"He has told us the number of problems arising in the schools is quite extensive," Sullivan said. "We want to see for ourselves."

Sullivan, asked about reports the subcommittee would investigate racial tensions and the possibility of racial segregation in New York schools, replied:

"I am not of the view that the school problem is in any way tied in with racial integration."

To Segregate 'Problem Pupils,' New Violence

NEW YORK (UP)—The board of Education pressed today for speedy segregation of juvenile delinquents as part of a newly adopted six-point program to cut crime and violence in New York's harried public schools.

At the same time the board defended the great majority of pupils with a declaration that problem children total "less than one per cent" of the city's nearly one million students.

BEGINS IN FAMILY

It said a solution to youthful lawlessness is up to the entire community, and added pointedly, "Discipline does not begin and end at the school door . . . proper respect for law and order is the responsibility of the family" as well as of authorities concerned with children's daily living.

Every point of the program, drawn up by a special mayor's committee and adopted Tuesday night by the board has been under long previous consideration.

Shortly before the board's statement was issued, two more incidents of violence involving teenagers were reported:

Three 13-year-old school girls attacked a public librarian in Brooklyn who accused one of them of using a "forged" library card, one of a pack stolen earlier. The librarian, Miss Rose Polsunas, 22, received neck and wrist injuries. One girl, a Negro, accused of instigating the attack, was arrested. During the melee several boys in the library stole $1.50 from the librarian's desk, she reported.

In the High School of Music and Art in Manhattan, a Negro youth estimated to be about 18 robbed a 16-year-old student of his wristwatch, shoes and 70 cents. In a similar case last week a student was robbed of his $75 watch and $3 cash. Both robbers escaped.

Other developments:

Kings County (Brooklyn) Judge George J. Joyce sentenced five members of a youth gang convicted of assault and said the traditional "three r's" now have a fourth—rape—and warned: "The time is coming fast when some jury or authority must take drastic action if this city does not want some of its schools run and operated by the law of the jungle."

Young Punks Stir Crisis In N.Y. Schools

Teachers Subjected To Indignities Amid Crime And Violence

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

NEW YORK, Feb. 22 (AP) — In James Hilton's classic tribute to teachers, Mr. Chips has his finest hour soothing student fears while the bombs fall on Britain.

Today, his real-life counterpart on this side of the ocean, whom a hard core of teen-aged terrorists scorn as "Mr. Chump," enjoys no such finest hour. But he does have his moments — swallowing his own fears when a stink bomb erupts in the closet or a bomb scare empties out the building.

Like Mr. Chips, he still hears his name fall from youthful lips as he arrives at school in the morning, or heads for home at night. Only it's not quite the same. There's a sneer in the air now.

NO DISCIPLINE TODAY

In confidential interviews with dozens of teachers, administrators policemen, janitors and others touched by the problem, it is apparent that times indeed have changed since Mr. Chips presided at the blackboard.

Dedicated men and women, willing to reconcile a teacher's pay with teaching rewards, have seen their college dreams of opening the doors of knowledge to some backward child dissolve into a nightmare struggle for discipline.

Said a janitor in a junior high school: "The teachers just seem to have lost control. They're on the run."

Last year New York City spent more than a half-billion dollars educating some 950,000 children in its 918 public schools. In the same year, by police department figures, it counted 3,495 incidents of crime and violence on school property. Of these, 515 were felonies.

Nearly two out of every three schools counted at least one criminal incident, but some 50 schools, located in what sociologists call "culturally deprived" areas — usually Negro, Puerto Rican or racially changing neighborhoods — monopolized the list.

CRIME AND VIOLENCE

With the 1958 spring term barely underway, the list already includes three rapes, two knifings, a school gang caught plotting a bank robbery, a teacher fleeing to a closet from club brandishing youths, a monitor beaten unconscious in a cafeteria fight, an assistant principal assigned to other duties because a gang threatened his life, exposure of a smut ring peddling pornography in the classroom.

The Board of Education estimates that only about one per cent of the students in its schools can be classified as hard-core trouble makers. But in a city the size of New York this means nearly 10,000 rough, tough customers.

The disciplinary problem moved presiding Judge John Warren Hill of the Domestic Relations Court to remark that "the Progressive Education system in the city's schools has gone haywire."

The issue stirred widespread attention when Principal George Goldfarb of Brooklyn's John Marshall Junior High School—where a 13-year-old girl had been raped —jumped to his death from his apartment house roof on the morning he was to appear for the third time before a special Brooklyn Grand Jury investigating school crime. The jury's recommendation that a policeman be assigned to every school was vigorously opposed by the Board of Education, but on the night before he died, Goldfarb had written a letter asking that his school be added to 40 others already under police protection.

With the board and the grand jury in sharp conflict over school crime, most teachers were extremely reluctant to talk, lest they be summoned before either body.

VARIETY OF CAUSES

But in confidential interviews they blamed New York's woes on a variety of causes: broken homes, working parents, backpatting children's courts, a state law requiring school attendance until age 17, "starry-eyed educators" who think all children are capable of being educated, a "continuous progress" policy that promotes and even graduates children of low ability and performance, wishy-washy principals who would rather ignore crime than back up a teacher so as not to "spoil their record over at 110" 110 Livingston St., Brooklyn, headquarters of the Board of Education), a tendency to wink at everyday insubordination until "a whole school gets out of hand," diminishing student respect for teachers who have learned to live with insult, and the constantly shifting racial patterns in a city that last year gained 311,000 Negroes, 304,000 Puerto Ricans and lost 320,008 whites.

"Nobody mentions race, said a teacher in a school that is undergoing rapid racial change, "but there definitely are discipline cases that can be laid to a Negro youth taking out his racial resentment on a teacher."

RACIAL TENSIONS

Other teachers cited fist fights at a gymnasium dance over a Negro trying to dance with a white girl, or a Negro and a white boy making cruel sport of a Puerto Rican's accent or even complete inability to speak English.

Said one: "Almost every teacher can tell you of case after case where the races get along fine together, but there are very few in the rough schools who can't tell of opposite examples."

These views were sharply contradicted by Asst. Supt. Joseph Noethen of the Bedford-Stuyvesant district, one of Brooklyn's roughest neighborhoods. "My best integrated school is for delinquent boys," he said. "There is no racial conflict at all."

City Supt. Dr. William Jansen said not race, but economic factors were involved in the school problem.

Teachers also complained that over the years, through various laws and policies, they had been stripped of almost all disciplinary weapons. "They know we can't do anything to them," said one teacher. "What can you do? Pink slip them to the office and they bounce right back. Give them homework and they don't do it. Keep them after school and they don't show up. Send for their parents and no one shows either. Sometimes you can't even flunk them. You're glad to get rid of them."

Added another, "above all, you can't hit them. Not only is it against the law but it's just what some of them would like you to do so they can belt you back and have the rest join in."

'FRONT OFFICE' POLICIES

Two teachers told of being advised "by the office" to pass a larger percentage of their students "so the school doesn't get a bad name."

To this, Dr. Jansen replied, "nonsense." Jansen said that last year more children were left back than in the previous year. He also emphatically denied that principals who reported disciplinary problems to the police jeopardized their chances of promotion.

Some teachers complained about authorities failing to crack down on teen-aged gang members who parade about the schools in bright silk jackets, embroidered with a gang name and emblem, making life miserable for non-members.

"Sometimes I think the only thing they ever got out of my class," said a Queens County history teacher, "was the name of their gang. They called it the Ostrogoths. We spent a lot of time on the Romans that year."

Almost every teacher interviewed cites cases of equipment stolen or wantonly smashed, of finding obscene drawings on the blackboard or concealed in a pull-down map, of lighted cigarettes dropped into the vent of a locker or stuffed in a roll of toilet tissue to make a smoke bomb, of firecrackers tossed down a stair well, of pencil marks and knife cuts down the length of a corridor, of dirty notes passed to girls and sometimes by girls, of teen-aged extortioners shaking down younger pupils for their lunch money.

"Some of these things may just be pranks," admitted a science teacher, "but let them go unpunished day after day and see how funny it gets."

NOT ALL PRANKS

And there were cases that no stretch of even youthful imagination could fit into the prank category: plumbing fixtures yanked out for sale to a junkman, girls pawed and manhandled by young hoodlums, glass partitions kicked out of stairways, teachers and bus drivers punched and kicked, discovery of a blackened, bent spoon —the tell-tale sign of the heroin user—in a desk or locker, tires slashed on a teacher's car, teachers having unlisted phones or putting the phone in their wife's name to prevent abusive calls, good-looking teachers brazenly asked for dates by leather-jacketed Lotharios, filthy-minded youths exposing themselves in a classroom.

As the controversy over school crime continued to make headlines, the Board of Education suddenly suspended 644 known trouble makers and Gov. Averell Add take two 34a Young --- --- - Harriman, Mayor Robert F. Wagner and other officials worked out a crash program to accelerate the building of more special schools and reform schools to handle the rowdy element.

There was talk at the State Legislature in Albany of lowering the compulsory school attendance age to 15 or even 14, which Harriman opposes. and of rewriting the State Education Act to expel immoral, insubordinate and chronically disruptive students.

MOST TEACHERS SILENT

Teachers for the most part kept silent about these various plans but most of those interviewed shared the determination of teacher George Ehrlich of Long Island City High School that Principal Goldfarb need not have died in vain.

Wrote Ehrlich in a moving letter to a New York newspaper:

"We have pledged our efforts toward a fitting memorial—a better school system where children can learn in peace and security and where teachers can walk with dignity and pride in the pursuit of their chosen profession."

Ban on 644 may be lifted—

Seven robbed in fresh N.Y. school violence

NEW YORK, Feb. 14—(AP)—The order for immediate suspension of public school pupils accused of violence or insubordination may be rescinded by April 1, a school official said yesterday.

Dr. Clare C. Baldwin, an aid to School Supt. Willian Jansen, said the "intolerable situation" which led to the crackdown on student trouble-makers should be "more or less" resolved by that date.

Meanwhile, there was further violence in the schools.

Two intruders, described as Negroes between 16 and 18 years old, invaded Macombs Junior High School in the Bronx yesterday and robbed seven students, including a girl, of four wrist watches and $6.

The victims, all white, were herded to a fourth-floor landing after two youths pushed past a student monitor to enter the building. One of the invaders was armed with a knife.

Principal Harry Flaum, saying this was the first such incident in his school, which has 1790 students, added angrily: "These weren't juvenile delinquents; they were adult hoods."

SCHOOL OFFICIALS said the end of the problem-student ouster policy was predicated upon the city's plan to open four more schools to accommodate maladjusted children. An announcement Wednesday by Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Gov. Averell Harriman said the additional special schools would be opened within a month.

These schools would take in the 644 students suspended last Friday in a drastic move to cut crime in the city's integrated school system after a series of rapes, assaults and other violence involving both white and Negro students in several of New York's 900 school buildings.

For several months a Brooklyn Grand Jury has been probing crime in the schools.

IN ANOTHER development yesterday, James L. Sullivan, chief counsel of a special U. S. Senate subcommittee investigating juvenile delinqpency, said he was conferring with city and schoool officials on the advisability of conducting public hearings on the situation.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People attacked the Grand Jury probe, saying it has furnished "grist for the propaganda mill" of opponents of mixing white and colored children in the schools.

N.Y. Mayor Gets Plan To End School Crime

NEW YORK, Feb. 4 (AP)—A draft of a program designed to wipe out crime in the city's schools was submitted today to Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

The 3-page draft represented views pooled at a special meeting of educators and other city officials last night.

There was no immediate indication of the program's contents.

The calling of the meeting was Wagner's first direct intervention in a crisis which heightened in recent weeks as teen-age violence flared anew in Brooklyn schools. So far this week, the violence has subsided.

The violence touched off a heated controversy between the Board of Education and a Brooklyn grand jury over methods of fighting juvenile crime.

The Board accused the jury of "harassing" school officials and making a threatening statement to George Goldfarb, a Brooklyn school principal who committed suicide last week. The jury foreman, A. George Golden, accused the Board of telling "deliberate lies" and said the charges were an attempt to divert the jury from its course.

William Peer, the Mayor's executive secretary said the "general situation" in the schools, including the program of special schools for problem children, was discussed at the special meeting.

Peer was asked whether "racial integration" was discussed, and he replied that he could not give details of the session.

There have been continuing efforts to give schools a mixed racial character.

Talmadge, Javits Clash In Senate Over Schools

Associated Press

Sens. Herman E. Talmadge (D-Ga.) and Jacob Javits (R-N. Y.) clashed verbally in the Senate yesterday over outbreaks of violence in Brooklyn schools.

Talmadge told his colleagues the people of Georgia "are deeply sympathetic with the citizens of Brooklyn in the difficulties they are experiencing in maintaining the integrity and independence of their public schools."

Javits said Talmadge was "shedding crocodile tears." He said Talmadge seemed to be voicing the position of those in the South who "presevere in working against the mandates of the Supreme Court" in ruling against racial segregation in the schools.

"The people of Brooklyn see no relation between the violation of the law of the land (in the South) and an effort to suppress disorder (in Brooklyn)," he said.

SEGREGATE TROUBLE MAKERS?

Crowded Public Housing Blamed In School Trouble

By ALBERT MCCOLLOUGH

NEW YORK (UP) — A junior high school principal flings himself to death from a rooftop.

He has headed a school where in the past few weeks:

A white girl has been raped by a Negro boy in a corridor.

Two Negro boys attack another with a knife and a shovel handle.

Two Negro boys fight a policeman who ordered them to move away from the school grounds.

Two other Negro boys beat up the school's white recreation director.

The school is John Marshall Junior High in Brooklyn. It has 1,214 students—45 per cent white, 45 per cent Negro and 10 per cent Puerto Rican.

SOUTHERN REACTION

The violence leads a Mississippi congressman to demand that President Eisenhower federalize New York's National Guard to restore order. It draws from Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus the caustic query of what similar behavior at Little Rock's Central High School would have provoked.

Is this specific New York school case, then, an indictment of the evils of trying to integrate the public schools? Or is it a manifestation of vicous juvenile crime that is plaguing every large city in the nation regardless of race problems?

One significant fact is this: In conversations with teachers, students, parents, police and small shop merchants in the neighborhood, the race question is seldom mentioned as a reason for the violence. This has long been a melting pot area in a city that is a melting pot.

It so happens that Negroes were involved in most of these incidents. And the grand jury now investigating Brooklyn schools was called because a judge was angered by the case of a Negro boy who walked into a classroom and threw lye into the face of a white boy.

PLAYING HOOKEY

What's more, most of the youths involved in the incidents at John Marshall were not from that school. They were involved in what has become a favorite trick for young hoodlums—playing hookey from their own school and raising trouble in another where they are not known.

One proposed remedy is segregation—not by race but segregation of the juvenile delinquents and troublesome students into "problem schools" apart from the others.

A visit to John Marshall disclosed teachers shocked at the suicide of Principal George Goldfarb, a dedicated educator only two years from retirement. Parents are worried, some pupils are tough and belligerent, some just plain scared. Few teachers will talk with reporters.

Mothers, members of the PTA, for a long time have helped keep order in the halls. After Goldfarb's suicide, they checked students in and out, barred entrance to adults without business there. No policeman patrols inside the school—as do officers in 40 New York public schools.

SUDDEN CHANGE

Step into a luncheonette across from John Marshall, while you wait for classes to end, and listen:

"It's changed," a man says. "we were happy when we first moved here.

"It seemed to happen overnight, though it really started 10 years ago, I guess, when they started the projects. (Public housing projects built a few blocks away in what was a neighborhood of one-family homes.)

"But three years ago was when the troubles relly began. The muggings, robberies, rapes. They happen all the time now. It isn't safe here anymore. You don't go out at night—and you worry in the daytime, too. My wife, my daughter, they're afraid. . . ."

The school bell rings, children surge out.

The luncheonette proprietor wipes his counter nervously.

"Well, here they come," he mutters. "I wonder what it will be like today?"

Ousted-Pupil Plan Adopted By City, State

To Provide 4 More '600' Schools Within Month, 2 More by Autumn

By Judith Crist

Gov. Harriman and Mayor Wagner yesterday announced an "immediate" four-point city-state crash program to solve the city's critical juvenile delinquency problem. After a two-and-a-half-hour conference at the Governor's town house at 16 E. 81st St., attended by ten city and eight state officials, the Governor and Mayor reported on the results. Their program called for:

1. The opening of four "600" schools, with specialized programs, to accommodate between 600 and 800 maladjusted youngsters, "within a month," in existing buildings, to be financed by a $500,000 immediate appropriation by the city, and two more such schools to open by September.

2. A study by the State Education Department, to be started Friday morning, to determine the Board of Education's needs for special classes and consideration of additional state aid, and, if necessary, its appropriation.

3. Consideration of a work-study program for certain students, under the aegis of the Board of Education and to be developed with the cooperation of labor leaders. "Under no circumstances" is there to be any change in the child-labor or compulsory-education laws.

4. An inmmediate search in the state or city for custodial facilities to provide 200 to 250 "beds" for delinquents who need training - school care, to be provided for, if necessary, by an additional appropriation in the state budget.

"Wide Range" Covered

At the conference, the Governor said that a "wide range of subjects of concern to city and state officials" were discussed. He said:

"We began with the problems of the guidance services in the schools, and agreed that there should be intensified study of these problems between city and state education officials."

Mayor Wagner announced that the Board of Education would be prepared to open the four new "600" schools "in buildings to be made available" within a month and two more by September. These six "600" schools have been requested in the Board of Education's 1958-'59 budget, but the $500,000 necessary to get the four staffed and started will be provided by the city.

City Budget Director Abraham D. Beame said the money would "probably not" come from Board of Education funds, adding, "We'll find it somewhere in the city budget, though."

Students Screened

The Mayor noted that the board is presently screening the more than 544 troublesome students suspended Friday, and that some will be returned to school if parental co-operation is offered, some will be assigned to "600" schools and others will be found to need custodial care.

The four "600" schools will accommodate between 600 and 800 pupils, he said, and will therefore not only accommodate some of the suspended students, but also other youngsters who are on the waiting lists of the over-crowded existing "600" schools.

The Mayor conceded that the new schools would be "makeshift at the beginning," but will get all the necessary facilities for a fully specialized program. As to getting the money, he said:

"If the buildings were available tomorrow, the city would appropriate the money immediately. It will take a little time, though. The work on these and other aspects of the program will start tomorrow or the day after at the latest.

As to the second point, Gov. Harriman said that State Education Commissioner James E. Allen jr. has agreed to study the city's needs in special classes "to see if it is appropriate to consider the matter of further state aid." He said that at present the state is providing about $8,800,000 for such classes, and the city is spending $300,000 more than that. He noted that Superintendent of Schools William Jansen had said that while the average child's education costs $400 a year, it costs $600 to $800 to educate a youngster in a specialized class.

Commissioner Allen and Dr. Jansen will meet on this matter on Friday, the Governor said.

As to a work-study program, Gov. Harriman said that Commissioner Allen believed that such a program—involving part-time study and part-time work—could be developed under existing law. The program, he emphasized, would be conducted under the supervision of educational authorities and be developed in consultation with labor leaders. He said:

"There is no question of reducing the age of which children can leave school. A work-study program can play a healthy role in a child's education. It would not be undertaken without the co-operation of labor unions.

"Let me emphasize that I will veto any bill that would attempt to change the child labor law or that would alter the compulsory education law, which requires schooling to the age of seventeen."

Mayor Wagner said:

"That's also the position of the city."

State Labor Commissioner Isador Lubin noted that in several counties, including Rockland, such programs have been worked out by the school authorities in conjunction with labor groups, churches and social agencies. He said, "The youngsters work outside the school hours, then attend school part-time. It's like the Antioch system." He was referring to the work-study program at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio.

The fourth point, Gov. Harriman said, involved a review of the question of increasing state training-school facilities which are custodial institutions for juvenile delinquents. He said:

"It was pointed out that, with the expansion of the past few years, there are about 60 percent more beds available than there were in 1955, and the increase provided in our current budget requests would be about 85 per cent.

"But there is a need for an immediate program for 200 to 250 beds. It takes time to build such facilities, and so we are going to find existing facilities that we can buy and convert to immediate training school use."

These facilities, he said, could be leased or purchased, and temporary buildings would also be considered to expand existing state facilities.

Sites in City Sought

Mayor Wagner said there would also be a search for such facilities within the city, although it had been generally agreed that Ellis Island, which had been suggested by some persons, would be inappropriate for such a purpose.

City Administrator Charles F. Preusse, Mr. Beame and State Welfare Commissioner Raymond Houston will start an immediate search for such facilities.

Gov. Harriman said there could be no estimate at this point of what these facilities might cost, but that they might well call for an additional appropriation to be added to the state budget.

Other state officials at the conference were Correction Commissioner Thomas J. McHugh; Mark McCloskey, chairman of the State Youth Commission; State Mental Hygiene Commissioner Paul Hoch; Jonathan Bingham, secretary to the Governor, and Charles Van Devander, the Governor's executive assistant.

Others at Meeting

Other city officials present were John Warren Hill, Presiding Justice of the Court of Domestic Relations; Ralph W. Whelan, Co-Ordinator of the city's anti-delinquency program; Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education; Assistant Superintendant of Schools Clare Baldwin, an aid to Dr. Jansen; Deputy Mayor John J. Theobald; Harold F. Hay, secretary of the Board of Education, and William R. Peer, executive secretary to the Mayor.

The Governor pointed out that the conferees had been told there has been a 100 per cent increase in the commitment of children to state hospitals, with the number currently at 1,200. Of the 600 increase, he said, "80 per cent are juvenile delinquents who are being taken care of by the state."

Gov. Harriman, in response to questioning, said "there is a difference of opinion" on the number of "beds" the city needs in state institutions providing custodial care for children, with the number ranging from 400 to 600. "But it is agreed that there is an immediate need for the 200 to 250."

He said there is also "a difference of opinion" on how long children committed to such institutions should be kept there, whether they should be "released in six months or a year and a half." The Governor noted, "That's not the issue at the moment."

Move Not Discussed

The conferees, the Governor said, "did not discuss" the Board of Education's move in suspending the more than 544 troublesome students in a sudden crackdown. Mayor Wagner noted, "It's a fait accompli at this point, anyway." But, the Governor added, "the state people indorsed the board's plans for expanding special facilities to handle them."

Asked for an estimate of what the program might cost the state, Gov. Harriman said:

"We'll have to find out the costs first. We might have to have a special appropriation. We'll have to provide extra money to go into special services."

While the state and city officials met at the Governor's house, investigators for the Senate subcommitee on juvenile delinquency yesterday established headquarters in the Brooklyn Federal Court House to start to study the delinquency situation. James Sullivan, chief counsel of the subcommittee which held hearings here briefly early in December, said the subcommittee would try to determine whether the city needed Federal aid in its fight on delinquency in the schools.

Chief Racial Rivalry in New York City Involves Negroes and Puerto Ricans

The United Press brought its Atlanta bureau manager to New York to get a Southerner's viewpoint on whether race friction is causing the violence in schools and on the streets. Last of three dispatches.

By Al Kuettner

NEW YORK, Feb. 27 (U.P.)—For the price of a $52.50 plane ticket, you can get to New York from Puerto Rico in less than six hours. What's more, you can get a "refund" for part of the fare by applying for relief the day after arrival.

This situation has brought to the sidewalks of New York and swarming into its already crowded tenements a tremendous number of islanders—550,000 at latest count. Planes from San Juan haul them in at the rate of about 1000 per week.

Many come to the United States jobless and with large families. You don't have to walk the streets of the Nation's biggest city for long before you discover that New York thus has a type of racial problem that is entirely unknown in the deep South.

I have spent a week here studying juvenile problems that have led to all sorts of violence and school troubles. Many of those engaged in knifings, rape and assault are Puerto Rican. My mission was to determine if possible to what extent racial troubles are involved.

The Spanish Harlem

There are whole sections of this city, but notably a huge area of Manhattan, that are populated by Spanish-speaking people ranging in appearance from Caucasian to Negroid.

Their abode in the main is a section roughly bounded by the East and Harlem Rivers, 5th ave. and 110th st. This is Spanish Harlem or, as most Puerto Ricans now call it, El Barrio de Nueva York.

In this teeming area with the population of many cities is located every type of dwelling from squalid tenement to comfortable quarters. The crime and juvenile delinquency rate is high, the cost in welfare payments is huge and the children are numerous.

It is estimated that one out of five Puerto Ricans in New York gets some form of welfare payment. The other 80 per cent have secured good jobs and are reliable and sometimes prosperous citizens. They are the backbone of such industries as the garment factories, hotels and restaurants.

Puerto Ricans bring a special kind of racial problem to New York because they have a language difficulty and are unfamiliar with local customs. Particularly in the lower economic groups, they tend to explosive excitements. This has contributed to their high crime rate.

The Language Problem

The youngsters swarm into the schools and run smack into the language problem and the inability to read and write English. This makes them self-conscious, often rebellious.

In an effort to learn more about these new residents, the New York school system has financed workshops in Puerto Rico where teachers observed and studied local customs and manners. More than 100 New York teachers are Puerto Rican natives, and instructors who have a knowledge of Spanish are sought after.

The real racial tension affecting the Puerto Rican element is between them and the Negro population, rather than the white race. This stems from jealousy mainly, plus economic concern. The two groups are bidding for many of the same type jobs.

Until the Puerto Ricans came, Negroes were on the low rung of the economic and social status ladder. They feel they should now be moved up and the Puerto Ricans, many of whom are as dark-skinned as Negro arrivals from Charleston, S. C., should be low man.

Racial feelings have not, however, broken out into warfare between Negroes and Puerto Ricans. Some of the toughest juvenile gangs of the city, such as the "Dragons," are a mixture of Puerto Rican, Negro and white. Seven members of the gang now are on trial for murder. Two are Puerto Rican, two Negro, two white and one from the Dominican Republic.

Ralph W. Whalen, executive director of the New York Youth Board, which has a $4,500,000 budget to aid problem children, recognizes the Puerto Rican problem as a severe challenge. but is not ready to pin the main responsibility for the city's juvenile delinquency on this group alone.

"You just can't put this problem at the feet of any one racial group," Whalen said. "Given better housing and the privilege of living a normal childhood, I feel that Puerto Ricans and Negroes would show up much better."

N. Y. C. Locates New Schools To Assure Integration

EDITOR'S NOTE: Scripps-Howard Staff Writer Dickson Preston covered last Fall's events at Little Rock for readers of The Post-Herald. In the following dispatch he describes an integration problem as it affects New York City.

BY DICKSON PRESTON
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

NEW YORK, Feb. 27—Segregation in New York State public schools has been illegal for 74 years.

Yet today there remain a number of all-Negro and all-white schools particularly on the elementary level.

These schools are not, of course, legally segregated. They are a happenstance of New York's "neighborhood" school districting system which assigns pupils to schools in their own neighborhoods with few exceptions.

Thus, in all-Negro areas such as Harlem and parts of Brooklyn, a school is unlikely to have any white pupils simply because there is none to assign it to. By the same token, many New York neighborhoods have no Negro residents.

Today Negro groups argue that the experience of mingling with children of other races should be an integral part of a child's education.

A case pending in New York County Supreme Court seeks a legal mandate to transfer a Negro girl to a racially-mixed junior high school outside her Harlem home neighborhood.

In this case, Mrs. Mae Mallory contends that her daughter, Patricia, 12, will "suffer educationally" if forced to stay in the Harlem school. She "will not have an opportunity to interrelate with children of other racial groups," according to the petition.

Some groups, among them the NAACP and the Urban League, have asked the New York Board of Education to transport children out of their home neighborhoods by bus in order to give them the experience of integration.

The board has granted this request in a few instances. In the Bedford-Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn, for instance, it permits high school children to choose among three schools.

Jansen and the board have agreed that, in building future schools, they will seek locations which will provide natural integration.

Thus, instead of putting a new school in the heart of a Negro district they will try to put it midway between neighborhoods which are white, Negro or Puerto Rican.

They are firm in rejecting requests by parents for transfers designed to avoid integration. One result of this has been a steady climb in the percentage of white pupils attending private or parochial schools. Another has been such an exodus to the suburbs that New York City proper has lost 5 per cent of its white population since 1950.

The School Board recently approved wording of a resolution stating that integration should be "a cardinal principle" of school zoning. But it rejected proposed wording that it be considered "the cardinal principle."

The whole situation is complicated by New York's vast influx of Puerto Ricans in recent years. They are classed neither as white nor Negro.

Veteran observers believe there is more racial tension between the Puerto Ricans and Negroes than between Negro and white. But nearly every one here agrees that racial clashes as such are not a major factor in the wave of juvenile crime which has stirred this city in recent weeks. What produces delinquents, they insist, is poverty and ignorance. not race.

Q.—Mr. President, when you went to Oklahoma City——

A.—Yes.

Q.—You made an appeal at that time to the people on the boards of education——

A.—That's right.

Q.—In the communities around the country. That's right.

Q.—Do you plan to carry that on with other speeches to the people of the country?

A.—Well, I'll say this, Mr. Reston: I certainly will make no effort to keep from—my views from being known and, on the contrary, I will try to make them known. But when you come to say "making speeches," I am not one that believes that a person's convictions are made very much stronger by just repeating and repeating and repeating speeches. I just don't happen to be built that way.

But, I'll say this: I am for the whole idea of getting these good communities, and, as a matter of fact, I've had letters from many of them where they are really doing something about it.

Mr. Smith—Thank you, Mr. President.

Teen-Agers Give Views On Problems

By Daniel S. Greenberg
Staff Reporter

Fifty-two members of that relatively unnoticed group—the Nation's 15 million unde linquent teen-agers—took time out from a tour of Washington yesterday to comment on problems plaguing their elders.

"I'm from South Carolina," said Christe McCoy, 17, "and I know about the problems that can make integration difficult. But I think most teen-agers actually are for integration and it would work if adults and politicians would get out of the picture."

Christe said her own school, at Rock Hill, isn't integrated, "but if it were, there wouldn't be any violence. Some parents might take their children out of the school," she added, "but most of the students would accept integration."

Christe and her fellow tourists, representing each state, the District, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and Alaska, are on a 4-day all-expense tour of Washington as winners in the 11th annual Voice of Democracy scriptwriting contest.

They were selected on the basis of a 3-to-5-minute broadcast on the subject of "I speak for Democracy."

"Since the sputniks," said Suzanne Buhrer, 17, of Dallas, Tex., "a lot of pressure has been put on students to go into science. I think science is being overemphasized. We need scientists," she said, "but we need people with other training, too."

John Chioles, 17, a native of Greece, who is studying at Danville, Ohio, and awaiting naturalization, blamed juvenile delinquency on "lack of stability in family life and lax educational standards."

"Some students," he said, "pursue sports to the exclusion of almost everything else. School policies that permit this aren't good for the students."

"Science studies should be expanded," John said, "but so should all other studies, especially language. And above all," he added, "we shouldn't be in a panic about the Russians. I don't think they are ahead of us, but I can't seem to convince anybody of that."

Richard Weinig, 17, of Farmington, N. M., laid the blame for juvenile delinquency squarely on parents. "When parents don't care what their kids are doing," he said, "juvenile delinquency is the result."

Putting social and educational problems aside, Jean Albright of Angola, Ind., Lynn Gustafson of Great Falls, Mont., and Rennard J. Strickland of Muskogee, Okla., voiced an opinion shared by their fellow tourists: Washington was a mighty cold place yesterday.

The 4-day tour ends Tuesday with presentation of $500 scholarships at a luncheon at the Willard Hotel to four grand winners.

The contest is sponsored by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, The Electronic Industries Association and the National Association of Broadcasters.

CRISIS NO. 4:

Compulsory Attendance Is Nagging

By ROBERT E. BASKIN
Fourth in a series
Written for Jackson Daily News and Dallas Morning News

NEW YORK (Special) — Morris Kaufman is a mild-mannered man in his 40's whose job takes him to the very heart of New York's racially mixed areas that spawn juvenile crime.

He is one of about 400 attendance officers who enforce the compulsory school laws in New York City.

Failure to attend school is one of the first symptoms of juvenile crime, and the State of New York decrees that every child between the ages of 7 and 17 shall go to school.

Every effort is made to enforce this law to the utmost.

As an attendance officer, Kaufman has a vast area of Manhattan to patrol. Some of it is in the time-worn environs of the Bowery. Some of it is in the middle-class apartments of the huge Peter Stuyvesant apartment project.

It was a raw, wet day when we set out with Kaufman on his rounds.

ROBERT E. BASKIN
Looks Closely at New York

He carried with him a 2-inch thick stack of cards, each containing student's failure to attend school.

The route carried us quickly into the Bowery where human derelicts sought spots of warmth in New York's unusually severe winter.

Then we walked along streets of sagging apartment buildings. The ancient structures, narrow 4- and 5-story walkups were grimy and on the restricted sidewalks smelly garbage cans stood like ill-kempt sentinels before each doorway.

Kaufman's first place of call was a 4-story red-brick building.

Inside there was little light. The walls of the first-floor hall were dirty and peeling.

It took a great deal of door-knocking to arouse the caretaker, who turned out to be a bristling-haired Negro man who appeared to be preparing his breakfast.

Did he know the family? After some thought, he said he believed they were on the fourth floor. Then the long trudge up the iron stairs, our progress noted from time to time by occupants peering from barely opened doors.

Finally, the door was found and Kaufman rapped authoritatively on it. A short, dark man appeared, wearing heavy woolen pajamas.

HITS LANGUAGE BARRIER

Kaufman, who speaks six languages, tried them all in vain. But it was possible to establish that the family was Greek and the man did not know where his truant 13-year-old daughter was.

Then down, down the narrow stairs again. It would take another visit—with someone who spoke Greek fluently.

The next apartment building was much the same. On the third floor lived a Puerto Rican family. Inside was an elderly woman and a small red-cheeked girl of 3.

Three rooms, cluttered, but with a few Puerto Rican decorations.

Where was the 12-year-old boy who had not been attending school? Kaufman asked the woman in Spanish.

He was with relatives, the woman said. He could not go to school because he had no clothes. Besides, his head hurt. Could clothes be provided for him by the school? Kaufman, noting the family's income on his card, explained that they were not eligible for such help. But the boy must be found and returned to school. He was firm about that. If the boy needed medical care, he would get it.

There were more calls in similar homes, all of a depressing dreariness.

This, a person could not help reflecting, was the New York that was a mecca to millions from all over the world. Negroes from the South, Puerto Ricans from sugar plantations, Greeks from mountain villages had flocked here in the hope of improving their condition.

After the round of visits, Kaufman talked about New York.

"We can't put up roadblocks to keep the people from coming here," he said. "But when they get here we must do all we can to see that they get an education and other opportunities. There is the dignity of man to remember."

This phrase is one that is heard frequently in talking to school and social workers here.

MILLIONS FOR WELFARE

To maintain the dignity of man New York pays out millions annually in welfare funds. There is no residence requirement, and a family arriving fresh from Puerto Rico can immediately obtain these payments—rent, groceries, pocket money.

Kaufman is an educated man, holder of a bachelor's degree and now pursuing his studies at Fordham. He feels keenly his duty to help children receive an education.

He believes that only a small minority of students are causing the trouble in the schools. Despite the slums and the conditions that contribute to delinquency, he feels that some gains are being made.

He turned the talk to Texas. He had read Edna Ferber's "Giant" and had found it an interesting study of social conditions there. Why, he asked, did the state not do something about the King Ranch? What about the plight of the Mexicans in Texas?

It would have done no good to explain. Texas was far away, New York was right here, in all its squalor and ugliness.

2 NY Boys Hospitalized By Attacks

NEW YORK, Feb. 5 (AP) — One school boy was stabbed today and a second beaten up in a new flare-up of public school lawlessness. The robbery of two other students also was reported.

Both of the assaulted boys were on monitor duty, with authority over other students during a particular phase of school activity. Both victims are white, their assailants Negro.

Frank Sloan, 16, was beaten by three Negro youths in the fourth-floor lunchroom of George Washington High School in Upper Manhattan. He was taken to a hospital with a possible brain concussion.

SLOAN GAVE ORDERS

Police said Sloan directed his assailants to pick up paper they had thrown on the floor and also barred them from the girls' section of the cafeteria. The three, one 16 and the other two 15 years old, then jumped him. The trio were arrested by police.

Victim of the stabbing was Phillip Romano, 15, white, on monitor duty at an entrance to Henry Hudson Junior High School. He was supposed to keep students out until the opening class bell.

Police said James Whitney, 14, a Negro, questioned Romano's authority and stabbed him with a letter opener during a scuffle. Romano was reported in satisfactory condition after an operation at Jacobi Hospital.

WHITNEY PAROLED

Whitney was charged with juvenile delinquency and paroled in the custody of his mother.

In Manhattan, a 6-foot-1 Negro teen-ager was seized by police while entering the High School of Music and Art by a seldom-used rear door.

The youth, Robert Ashby, 19, was identified by police as the individual who robbed one of the school's white pupils, Jan. 27 and a second one yesterday. He was accused of taking their watches and small amounts of cash while pretending he held a gun in his pocket.

Ashby was quoted by police as saying he was on dope and needed money to buy more.

A rash of rapes, assaults, knifings and general juvenile lawlessness has swept through some of the city's nearly 900 public school Although only a small percentage of the city's one million pupils have been involved, a Brooklyn grand jury has been aroused by the crimes.

As a result of jury pressure, policemen now are posted at 41 public schools.

One of the crime-beset schools has been Brooklyn's John Marshall Junior High School. Its principal, George Goldfarb, committed suicide last week after two appearances before the Brooklyn grand jury.

(In Chicago, nine Negro youths held in the stripping, beating and cutting of an 11-year-old white girl underwent stiff questioning and lie detection tests tonight.

(All insisted, according to detectives, they were innocent of the assault last night on Carol Foss in a basement areaway near her home on the South Side.

(Englewood Hospital reported the girl in fair condition. Doctors said she was too weak to view any of those held in connection with the case.

(Carol told police a gang of Negro youths stripped off her clothing — a Brownie Scout uniform — beat her and slashed her with either a knife or a broken bottle).

2 N. Y. School Boys Attacked; 2 More Robbed

NEW YORK, Feb. 5 (AP) — One school boy was stabbed today and a second beaten up in a new flare-up of public school lawlessness. The robbery of two other students also was reported.

QUESTIONS AUTHORITY

Police said James Whitney, 14, a Negro, questioned Romano's authority and stabbed him with a letter opener during a scuffle. Romano was reported in satisfactory condition after an operation at Jacobi Hospital.

Whitney was charged with juvenile delinquency and paroled in the custody of his mother.

Principal Harriet Byrne said the stabbing was the first violence at the Bronx School within her memory. She added that it has a reputation of being a quiet school.

In Manhattan, a 6-foot-1 Negro teen-ager was seized by police while entering the High School of Music and Art by a seldom-used rear door. The school draws talented pupils from throughout the city.

The youth, Robert Ashby, 19, was identified by police as the individual who robbed one of the school's white pupils, Jan. 27 and a second one yesterday. He was accused of taking their watches and small amounts of cash while pretending he held a gun in his pocket.

A rash of rapes, assaults, knifings and general juvenile lawlessness has swept through some of the city's nearly 900 public schools. Although only a small percentage of the city's one million pupils have been involved, a Brooklyn grand jury has been aroused by the crimes.

As a result of jury pressure, policemen now are posted at 41 public schools.

One of the crime-beset schools has been Brooklyn's John Marshall Junior High School. Its principal, George Goldfarb, committed suicide last week after two appearances before the Brooklyn grand jury.

GOTHAM SCHOOL YOUTH STABBED

Another Beaten in New Flareup of Violence

NEW YORK, Feb. 5 (AP)—One schoolboy was stabbed Wednesday and a second beaten up in a new flareup of public school lawlessness. The robbery of two other students also was reported.

Both of the assaulted boys were on monitor duty, with authority over other students during a particular phase of school activity. Both victims are white, their assailants Negro.

Frank Sloan, 16, was beaten by three Negro youths in the fourth floor lunchroom of George Washington High school in upper Manhattan. He was taken to a hospital with a possible brain concussion.

Police said Sloan directed his assailants to pick up paper they had thrown on the floor and also barred them from the girls' section of the cafeteria. The three, one 16 and the other two 15 years old, then jumped him. The trio were arrested by police.

Victim of the stabbing was Phillip Romano, 15, white, on monitor duty at an entrance to Henry Hudson Junior High school. He was supposed to keep students out until the opening class bell.

Police said James Whitney, 14, a Negro, questioned Romano's authority and stabbed him with a letter opener during a scuffle. Romano was reported in satisfactory condition after an operation at Jacobi hospital.

Whitney was charged with juvenile delinquency and paroled in the custody of his mother.

Principal Harriet Byrne said the stabbing was the first violence at the Bronx school within her memory. She added that it has a reputation of being a quiet school.

In Manhattan, a six-foot, one-inch Negro teen-ager was seized by police while entering the High School of Music and Art by a seldom-used rear door. The school draws talented pupils from throughout the city.

STUDENTS IDENTIFY

The youth, Robert Ashby, 19, was identified by police as the individual who robbed one of the school's white pupils Jan. 27 and a second one Tuesday. He was accused of taking their watches and small amounts of cash while pretending he held a gun in his pocket.

Ashby was quoted by police as saying he was on dope and needed money to buy more. Both of the victimized students identified Ashby as the youth who held them up.

726 PUPILS OUSTED, JANSEN DISCLOSES

New Total Gives Total Since Feb. 7 in First of Planned Weekly Meetings With Press

219 EXPELLED EARLIER

Hearings Conducted for Half —80 Returned to School on Promise to Behave

By LEONARD BUDER

Superintendent of Schools William Jansen disclosed yesterday that 726 pupils had been suspended in the crackdown on youthful troublemakers.

The figure was the first official total given out since Feb. 7, when the Board of Education started its policy of suspending pupils charged with a violation of law involving violence or insubordination.

Dr. Jansen said that 219 pupils were already under suspension when the new policy went into effect, raising the total of recent suspensions to 945.

Of the 945, the Superintendent said, 811 were still under suspension as of last Friday.

Dr. Jansen relased the figures at a press conference at school headquarters, 110 Livingston Street, Brooklyn. It was the first of a series of weekly press conferences that the Superintendent is planning to inform public.

[illegible] report showed th[illegible] had been held for [illegible] of the 945 suspend[illegible] After the hearings, eig[illegible] returned to their regular sc[illegible] were assigned to other schools on promise of good behavior.

Disposition Listed

Seven youngsters were transferred to "600" schools, which are intended for pupils who pose disciplinary and behavior problems. Fifty-five other pupils were continued on suspension while awaiting the opening of special "700" schools.

Dr. Jansen said yesterday that two such schools would be opened on Monday. They are intended to be temporary facilities to be used until the pupils can be accommodated by the 600 schools.

The 600 and 700 schools receive their names from their numerical designations.

Forty-seven other pupils, the report showed, have been dropped from the city school system. Some were over the compulsory school attendance age or had obtained working papers and a few had moved from the city or enrolled in nonpublic schools. The disposition of other cases that have been heard is still pending.

Dr. William A. Hamm, associate superintendent in charge of the division of child welfare, told the conference that the system was having trouble finding suitable abandoned school buildings for 600 and 700 schools. He indicated that because of this and other factors, the system might not be able to open six new 600 schools during the 1958-59 school year as planned.

Welcomes State Aid

Turning to the subject of increased state aid to the city in the fight against juvenile crime, Dr. Jansen said that he welcomed the promise of support made Tuesday by the State Education Commissioner, Dr. James E. Allen Jr.

But Dr. Jansen would not comment on the specific proposals made by the Commissioner because he said he had not yet read the text of Dr. Allen's statement.

In addition to Dr. Jansen and Dr. Hamm, others who took part in the conference included Dr. C. Frederick Pertsch, associate superintendent in charge of the high school division, and Dr. Clare Baldwin, assistant superintendent who serves as an aide of Dr. Jansen.

Meanwhile, another incident involving crime in a school was reported yesterday. A 10-year-old pupil at Public School 28 in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn was beaten and robbed of $11.12 by an unidentified boy believed to be about 13 or 14 years old.

The victim, James Ford of 2123 Dean Street, had collected the money from teachers as payment for newspaper subscriptions. The robbery took place in a stairwell of the school at 1001 Herkimer Street.

Recognition Of Danger Signals Helps Preserve Race Relations

The ugly, tragic incidents at John Marshall Junior High School in Brooklyn are part of the price the citizens of New York City must pay for ignoring the proportions of crime and racial tension in their city.

In New York, policemen, educators and public officials maintain that the violence accompanying massive racial integration is the work of a "few individuals" or "outsiders." It is easy for Southerners to see how deluded are the poor people of New York City. Southerners should take care not to become victims of the same delusions.

In Charleston, public officials have offered assurances that racial relations here are good. They say that recent crimes involving conflict between white people and colored people are "isolated incidents." We accept the opinions of these officials as authoritative. Policemen and magistrates are in an excellent position to know the truth about race relations. They should be trusted to give timely warning of serious trouble.

Nevertheless, the citizens of Charleston should take care to keep themselves informed on the precise nature of "isolated incidents" involving the white and colored races. Occurrences so far include an attack by Negro teen-agers on a white policeman. They include attacks on white passersby by groups of Negro boys. They include fights between white and Negro youths in a motion picture theater.

Time will tell whether these incidents within a few weeks of one another were genuinely "isolated."

In the meantime, we see evidence that Charlestonians are concerned about the growth of crime involving teen-agers in Charleston. Recently a committee was formed to develop a plan for dealing with juvenile delinquency. The committee was not specifically charged with finding ways to improve race relations. The character of recent racial incidents, however, shows that preservation of good race relations depends in part at least on keeping juvenile hoodlums in check.

In handing down recommendations for dealing with juvenile crime, the committee offered no suggestions that we recognize as cures. As the committee knows, what is needed to halt juvenile crime is aroused public opinion. If the public grows sick and tired of having juvenile hoodlums running the streets, it will take steps to drive them from the streets.

New Yorkers should have grown sick and tired of juvenile crime long ago. Their leaders and their newspapers did not care to arouse them to its seriousness and they did not arouse themselves.

Juvenile crime and race relations are as much of a problem for Charleston as they are for other cities. We are not saying that Charlestonians are not alert to them. In fact there is evidence to the contrary. When a policeman was beaten by Negroes on a downtown street a few months ago, Negro citizens tipped authorities to the identity of the offenders.

There have been other cases in which citizens of both races have cooperated with police in tracking down persons responsible for violations of the public peace.

All we are saying is that race relations will not prosper in times of tension unless Charlestonians are aware when tension exists. The best way we know of to keep trouble to a minimum is to recognize each sign of friction for what it is—a danger signal—and try to deal with it before it gets out of control.

PRINCIPAL'S DEATH IS LAID TO THREAT BY A GRAND JUROR

Top School Officials Charge Goldfarb Suicide Followed Indictment Warning

ACCUSATION IS DENIED

Foreman Says Officials Lie —Mayor Will Confer With Jansen on Discipline

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

Board of Education officials charged yesterday that George Goldfarb, principal of John Marshall Junior High School, had committed suicide because a grand juror had told him he might be indicted.

The foreman of the gran jury denied the charge and called Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, a liar.

Mr. Goldfarb plunged to his death from the roof of his apartment in Brooklyn Tuesday morning at the time that he was scheduled to appear for the third time before a special Kings County grand jury that has been investigating juvenile violence in the borough's schools.

The accusation against the grand juror was made by Mr. Silver and Superintendent of Schools William Jansen. They said Mr. Goldfarb had reported the threat to the board last Thursday, a few hours after he had appeared before the jury for the second time.

The charges were made to reporters yesterday as the two officials arrived to attend funeral services for Mr. Goldfarb at the Riverside Chapel, Ocean Parkway and Coney Island Avenue, Brooklyn.

Grand Jury Denied

A vehement denial was immediately issued by A. George Golden, foreman of the special grand jury.

"We have never threatened anybody since the jury was impaneled on Nov. 6 last," he asserted. "We have treated every official with respect and courtesy. We are not dealing with hoodlums and roughnecks, but with highly respected educators.

"We are trying to help the Board of Education. We are not trying to indict them. Mr. Silver's remarks were lies made to befuddle the public. In everything we have thus far done, the board officials have deliberately lied and cast remarks against the members of this grand jury. It is a cry of witch hunt reminiscent of former Mayor O'Dwyer."

The reference to former Mayor William O'Dwyer concerned the statement he made in 1951 after a police captain had committed suicide during a grand jury investigation of gambling graft in Brooklyn.

Mayor Backs Board

The exchange of accusations was the latest development in a controversy between school officials and the grand jury as to whether policemen should be stationed in the city's schools. The jurors have urged the step and the Board of Education has opposed it. Mayor Wagner and Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy have supported the board's stand.

Mr. Wagner repeated his opposition to police guards when he returned to City Hall yesterday after a trip to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. However, he said he planned to confer with Dr. Jansen about the school troubles and to ascertain whether trouble-makers were being "coddled."

In reference to the police, he said:

"We don't want to run an education system with a policeman standing over it."

The grand jury will resume its inquiry into the Brooklyn school system today. It is scheduled to question Dr. Samuel M. Levenson, assistant superintendent of schools in the Crown Heights district, where John Marshall Junior High School is situated. The request for Dr. Levenson's appearance was made by J. Kenneth McCabe, chief assistant district attorney of Kings County.

Disorders Studied

The John Marshall school had been the subject of a grand jury inquiry because of disorders there. Mr. Goldfarb was to have been examined Tuesday for the third time mainly as the result of the reported rape last week in the school of a 13-year-old girl by a 15-year-old youth.

Another rape case involving a Brooklyn school girl went before the authorities yesterday. It involved an alleged assault Tuesday night by a 16-year-old youth on a 13-year-old girl on the stairway leading to the basement of Public School 20, at 225 Adelphi Street, in the Hill section of the borough.

Peter White of 384 Cumberland Street, Brooklyn, the youth who was accused, was arraigned in Brooklyn Adolescents Court before Magistrate John R. Starkey. He was held in $10,000 bail for a hearing next Monday. The alleged assault occurred while an evening recreation program was being held at the school under the auspices of the Bureau of Community Education.

Meanwhile, at John Marshall yesterday a policeman was stationed inside the building for the first time since the school became involved in youth violence.

The assignment resulted from a letter Mr. Goldfarb had written to the police Monday night requesting the policeman. A patrolman had previously been stationed outside the building.

Deputy Police Commissioner Walter Arm said that the policeman would do continuous patrol duty inside and outside the school, with the halls, stairways and basement of the building as part of his beat.

Mothers Patrol Lobby

There was an emotional atmosphere in the school yesterday. Pupils' mothers were on duty in the main lobby to help keep order, and teachers discussed Mr. Goldfarb's death with pupils in their official classes.

Youngsters said Acting Principal Benjamin M. Martin had informed them at the seventh-grade assembly that Mr. Goldfarb had died "because he worried for you." Mr. Martin urged them to be good children for the rest of the school year. The pupils reported that teachers wept while the morning prayer was read in the assembly.

Violence nearly erupted, however, when the children were dismissed at 1:30 P. M., earlier than usual, so that those who wanted could attend Mr. Goldfarb's funeral. A group of youths menaced Edward Hausner, a news photographer for The New York Times. One of them thrust a note into his hands. It said it was from the Corsair Lords, a teen-age gang.

"If the cops come in our school, we will make them move out," it read in part. "If you want the school improve, keep the flat foots out and keep people from out of territory

Raped Girl's School Head Dies in Fall

NEW YORK, Jan. 28 (AP) — The principal of Public School 210 in Brooklyn where a girl pupil was raped last week, fell or jumped to his death today when he was supposed to be testifying before a Kings County grand jury.

George Goldfarb, 55, plunged to his death from the roof of a six-story apartment building, his home, in Brooklyn.

He had appeared twice last week before a grand jury investigating conditions in Brooklyn schools and was due to appear again. His school had been the scene of other incidents requiring police attention.

CALLED OUTSTANDING

Supt. of Schools William Jansen issued a statement calling Goldfarb one of the outstanding junior high school principals in the City of New York.

Goldfarb was a graduate of New York University and holder of a master's degree. He taught commercial subjects in Madison High School and Long Island City High School until 1954. His wife works in the registrar's office of Brooklyn College.

Goldfarb administered a school of 1,214 pupils of which 45 per cent is Negro and 10 per cent Puerto Rican. There are 595 boys and 619 girls.

A 13-year-old white girl was raped in the basement of the school after a youth described as a Negro forced her to accompany him at knifepoint.

CASE UNSOLVED

The case has not been solved. Several boys were taken into custody for questioning but all subsequently were released.

In other school incidents since then, the school's recreation director was assaulted by a youth and another boy was arrested for refusing to leave the school yard on orders from a policeman.

The rape of the girl brought a renewed demand from a Brooklyn grand jury, which has been probing school crime, for stationing of officers at all city schools.

School authorities and police officials had rejected a similar demand made earlier by the grand jury.

Head of School Beset By Hoodlums Kills Self

New York, Jan. 28 (AP)—The principal of Brooklyn's hoodlum-beset John Marshall Junior High School killed himself Tuesday as a grand jury awaited his latest testimony on violence in his school.

Principal George Goldfarb leaped to his death from the roof of his six-story apartment building. The district attorney's office labeled the death a suicide.

Goldfarb, 55, was called before the grand jury twice last week after a 13-year-old John Marshall white girl was raped in the school by an unidentified Negro teen-ager.

The January 21 rape incident was followed two days later by an assault on a policeman stationed outside the school and on a recreational director inside. Three Negro youths, none a student at the school, were arrested.

Enrollment 45 Pct. Negro

The violence put John Marshall and its 1,200 white, Negro, and Puerto Rican students under the spotlight of a Brooklyn grand jury, already incensed by violence that has swept certain New York public schools.

John Marshall is one of nearly 900 city schools, which handle about a million pupils a day. Its student body is 45 per cent Negro, 10 per cent Puerto Rican, and the rest white.

These percentages make it one of the most evenly integrated schools in the city. There is no official segregation in New York's school system.

The Brooklyn grand jury demanded some time ago that policemen be stationed in troublesome schools. The jury renewed the recommendation after the rape incident at John Marshall.

Suggestions Refused

In both cases the Board of Education refused the suggestion. Such a policy, it said, would not prevent criminal activity in schools.

Goldfarb was supposed to have testified before the grand jury for the third time Tuesday morning.

He was a graduate of New York University. He held a master's degree. His first assignment as a principal was to John Marshall.

School Superintendent William Jansen called Goldfarb "one of the outstanding junior high school principals in the city of New York."

Brooklyn Rape-Case School 'Okay,' Pupils Tell Reporter in Interviews

By Judith [illegible]

John Marshall Junior High School, at Rochester Ave. and Park Place, in Brooklyn, was in the news last week because of the alleged rape of a thirteen-year-old student by an unidentified teen-ager on a school stairway and the subsequent arrest of three teenagers, not enrolled in the school, one for assaulting a patrolman in the schoolyard and two for attacking an after-school recreation leader in the school basement.

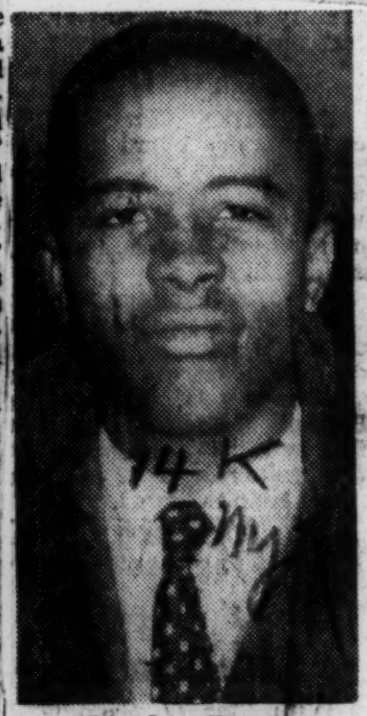
To some outsiders the school may seem to be a "trouble spot." To schoolmen and parents it reflects the "problems" of a neighborhood that is changing in economic status and population. To its students, the school rates from "very good" to "okay," with its recent notoriety attributable to "some bad kids you find anywhere" or "kids from the outside."

That the community is "sensitive" about the school situation was evidenced yesterday when this reporter and a photographer arrived outside the school at 3 p. m. when classes were dismissed. Within minutes, with the hunger for publicity and after-school enthusiasm normal for teen-agers, a friendly mob of about 200 students was milling around, pushing, shoving and shouting for attention.

Within fewer minutes two patrol cars, a police sergeant and a plain clothes lieutenant were on the scene, ordered the photographer to move his car and park it several blocks from the school, dispersed the crowd and enabled the reporter to continue individual interviews.

Meanwhile faces were pressed to windows of neighboring apartment houses, several women had called the station house to report a riot, a few more even telephoned the Herald Tribune to vow vengeance and some even came into the street to harangue the reporter and the photographer.

But when one woman berated the reporter with "It's you people who are causing all the trouble around here. The cops told you to get out and now I tell you to get out," a small unstudious-looking boy in the remaining crowd turned to her and said, "They did not. She can stay. That's freedom of the press!"



Hurley Davis

Fifteen, seventh-grade, of 131 Utica Ave., Brooklyn:

"The school is okay, a right nice school and the kids are okay. It's my first term here. I came from the Thomas Walker School, that's a segregated school in Virginia. I sure like it here. I've made a lot of friends, white, colored and Spanish. I read in the papers about all the trouble here. It doesn't bother me, not one bit. I had nothing to do with it."

Bernice Nekrutman

Twelve "next month," seventh grade, of 1453 Prospect Place, Brooklyn:

"The school is okay. I like the teachers very much. Those things that happen—boy, it gives a school a terrible reputation that it doesn't deserve. It's only a couple of bad kids who do something and people think we're bad and even the neighborhood gets a bad reputation. A lot of kids are afraid to walk in the halls. They're crazy. You just have to mind your own business."

Rebecca Pitt

Thirteen, eighth grade, of 1616 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn:

"The school's not too good and it's not too bad. I'm not warried about children getting raped: Like the principal said, if you mind your own business nothing will happen. Sometimes that's true. We have nice teachers and a nice principal and the school has been made nice. We have clubs and friends. Only thing I really don't like is social studies, sometimes."

Carlos Pile

Thirteen, eighth grade, of 1679 Prospect Place, Brooklyn:

'It happens in every school but just because things happen here they blame us. This school isn't bad. It's the people who come around it. They try, like having policemen around here. They can't do any good. The people who are real bad, the policemen pass them by. But you step out of line just once and boom, they got you. This school has a lot of good. Some of the best teachers are my teachers."

Richard Siegel

Thirteen, ninth grade, of 881 Washington Ave., Brooklyn:

"I think it's a very good school. The faculty's excellent and the principal does a very good job. The trouble is that once in a while people get a little out of hand and then the school gets unfavorable publicity. It doesn't represent the school or the pupils the way they are all the time or even when there's trouble."

Herald Tribune photos by Don Rice

Robert Fishman

Twelve, seventh grade, 1530 Lincoln Place, Brooklyn:

"There are certain kids here get in lots of fights and then the other kids, from outside the school, come in here to start trouble. It's not the kids from this school. A lot's been done to make this school very nice and we should be very happy. It costs plenty to paint a school like this, but still you get kids writing on the walls and marking up furniture. I enjoy all my teachers very much."

School Aides Ask Power For Ouster

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

High school teachers and principals protested yesterday against the forthcoming loss of their recently acquired power to suspend incorrigible pupils.

They were granted the power suddenly by the Board of Education on Feb. 6. The board issued the order that evening after a long session at which recent violence in Brooklyn schools was discussed.

That violence had been under investigation by the Kings County grand jury since November and is now under scrutiny of city, state and Federal officials.

Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, issued a circular last Tuesday returning suspension power to assistant superintendents as of April 1.

Dr. Jansen's modification of the board's new policy was protested yesterday by the High School Principals Association and the High School Teachers Association.

Emil H. Tron, president of the teachers group, declared that the "backsliding, rescinding deadline set for April 1 is creating a dismaying effect."

"The delinquency crisis extends far beyond the 644 suspended students," he continued.

"Reports from high school principals and deans of boys and girls indicate," he said, "that several thousand insubordinate, chronically disorderly and emotionally disturbed students must receive special attention in separate facilities. Incorrigibles must not be permitted to disrupt the high school education of the 99 per cent who value it."

'Wholesome Effect' Cited

The new suspension order, Mr. Tron said, gave principals "an enforceable weapon of discipline against chronic anti-social behavior."

Dorothy Bonawit, president of the principals association, also commended the "wholesome psychological effect" on both parents and pupils of the directive strengthening the principal's power.

She urged that the power be left in the hands of the head of the school in order that he might "better carry out his necessary school functions."

Under the normal procedure for suspension, the principal obtains permission from an assistant superintendent.

That procedure, according to some teachers, delays the final suspension so long that its effectiveness is weakened.

"Meanwhile," according to Mrs. Concetta Roy," the incorrigible pupil is still in school, interrupting classwork, harassing the teacher, contemptuous of the principal, the idol of his admiring classmates. Sometimes it takes months of red tape before the suspension finally comes through."

Mrs. Roy is dean of girls and acting administrative assistant in charge of guidance at Flushing High School in Queens. She said of Dr. Jansen's modifying circular, "why April 1? Will there be no more incorrigibles after that?"

She expressed the opinion that there would have been "thousands more" suspensions in the academic high schools had they been informed more promptly of the new power accorded principals.

"By the time we heard of it," Mrs. Roy asserted, "Dr. Jansen had already begun to modify it, and now the principal's power to suspend is being taken away."

On the day the new policy went into effect, Dr. Jansen's office reported that 544 pupils had been suspended that day in elementary, vocational and junior high schools. Incomplete figures from one-third of the academic high schools indicated that they had suspended 100 pupils that day.

Races Found on a Friendly Basis In One of New York's 'Worst' Schools

The United Press brought its Atlanta bureau manager to New York to get the viewpoint of a Southerner on whether race friction is causing the violence in the schools and on the streets. Second of a series of dispatches.

By Al Kuettner

NEW YORK, Feb. 25 (U.P.)—Let me take you to a school in Brooklyn so plagued by violence and insubordination that 38 of its students have been kicked out in the past two weeks.

One out of five of the pupils here is Negro. Another 15 per cent are Puerto Rican. Thirty per cent are Jewish, including some children from European refugee families who only recently came to the United States.

It is one of the worst schools in the city for disciplinary problems. The 38 suspended under a recent city edict permitting such drastic steps against troublemakers represent 6 per cent of the city-wide total of suspensions.

It Has No Playground

It is Eastern District High School, a four-story stucco building with no playground. It sits in the midst of endless rows of ancient brownstone houses, now split into apartments, their stoop steps littered with open garbage cans.

This is a critical slum area and the school is on the front line of this big city's harrowing efforts to educate its children under trying conditions.

Threading through cluttered and narrow streets, the cab driver gave me as fervent a lecture on behalf of racial segregation as I've ever heard from Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin.

"This was once a beautiful and peaceful section," the cabbie said. "Now it is filled up with Negroes and Puerto Ricans and your life isn't worth 25 cents on the streets at night."

With the combined gloom of the driver and the surroundings in mind, it is quite a shock to swing open the great doors of what was identified to me as "one of our problem schools."

No Segregation for Years

Classes are just at the period change and well-lighted and wide corridors are jammed with chattering teen-agers. There has been no racial segregation here for years. Negroes move with seeming self-confidence among fellow students.

There's one point, however, that cannot escape notice—except for strictly school operations, Negroes and other racial groups tend to gravitate toward their own people at the school.

In the gymnasium, mixed groups are shooting basketballs at the six backboards, but the tendency is for Negroes—by choice—to line up together.

There was nothing apparent during a lengthy and unconducted tour of this school to indicate any group was being discriminated against. Yet in the corridors and in those typical after-school gatherings, this tendency of racial groups to cling together persisted.

Negro boys and girls, questioned at random, told me that relations with white pupils are cordial and friendly, that there are no interracial fights.

A white girl called out cheerily to a Negro as they left the building: "Have a nice weekend."

The place, in fact, seems like any high school the country over, except for the mixture of races. Where, then, are the troublemakers?

Well, 38 of them are out on the streets. Each will get a hearing to see whether he is to be permanently expelled. The others are under the determined thumb of Principal Louis K. Wechsler.

Wechsler has been principal of Eastern District High for six years. He has three characteristics that make him a valuable administrator for a school in such a neighborhood as this. He is a strict disciplinarian, he knows his job and he loves children.

Before coming here, he brought into line within a month a junior high school that had a history of rape, stabbings and theft, where a teacher was pitched headlong down the stairs by a pupil.

"You ask me if the problem in the New York school system today is racial, and I can tell you it is not and I mean it," Wechsler said.

"Newcomers" Problem

"This problem is not because Negroes are Negroes," he said. "It is because they are newcomers. They are often at the bottom of the economic scale. They have not been recognized. And it is a sociological truth that until a person finds his place in society he is rebellious.

"We must learn not to get sentimental over race, but to get sentimental over people."

"We are reaping the product of 15 years of misdirected humanitarianism in our schools and we have done everybody, including the children, a disservice," he said.

"The disregard of the group for the sake of the individual is wrong," he said. "We have no more right to expose a class of pupils to a person who cannot be taught than we have to expose society to a person who cannot be cured of a disease.

"We are neither psychiatrists nor prison keepers. We are in school to teach and to learn. It is about time New York and the Nation recognize that there are certain children in any city who retard that goal and should be dealt with swiftly."

New York is preparing to open a special custodial high school for youngsters of a troublesome nature and Wechsler says the lack of such schools has been at the bottom of the trouble.

Powell Blasts Suspension Of 644 Troublesome Pupils

Adventurer Montgomery, Ala.
Mon 2-10-58
2-10-58

NEW YORK, Feb. 9 (AP)—Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-NY) denounced today the ouster of trouble-making students from the city's schools as "a form of Nazism forced upon the people of New York City" by Mayor Robert Wagner and top school authorities.

2-10-8

Powell, also pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church, told his Harlem congregation the "current outbreak of crime and violence in the New York City Public School System" derived in "the stupidity and indifference of Wagner, Silver and Jansen."

He referred to Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, and William Jansen, superintendent of schools, whose conferences with Wagner last week led to the board's crackdown on juvenile delinquency in the schools.

At least 644 pupils considered chronic trouble-makers were suspended from the city's schools Friday. The mass suspensions followed a series of rapes, knifings and other disorders involving white and Negro students on or near school property this year.

The Board's suspension policy immediately ignited a round of protests from parents' associations and groups concerned with public education.

Powell, a Negro, said the suspensions of children "not convicted but merely charged" with being disturbed or incorrigible was "no way to meet the problem."

Terming the Board's action "illegal," he added:

"Kicking them out into the streets, not only from 3 o'clock on, but the entire day will only help to make them into full time criminals."

The Negro congressman declared his opposition to "hooliganism" and "coddling criminals," but said the suspensions should be removed immediately and a conference called at City Hall with leaders of groups and agencies involved in youth work.

Meanwhile, city officials sought a solution to the problem of what to do with the suspended pupils.

N.Y. Readies Program On School Crime

By FRANK VAN DER LINDEN
A Special Correspondent

NEW YORK, Feb. 3 — Mayor Robert F. Wagner and city school officials met for more than two hours late today and indicated that they will announce tomorrow a new program to combat the rising wave of crime in New York's integrated public schools. Wagner declined to tell reporters exactly what was in the plan, but there have been requests for taking trouble-making teen-agers out of classrooms and segregating them in separate schools.

The problem of crime was highlighted here dramatically in the past few days when two 13-year-old school girls were raped and the principal of one of the schools involved committed suicide.

The board of education charged that the principal, George Goldfarb, leaped off his apartment roof because a member of the grand jury had threatened to have him indicted. The grand jury foreman, A. George Golden, called this charge a lie.

STEPS INTO FEUD

Mayor Wagner finally stepped into the feud between the grand jury and board of education, by calling 18 school officials, including the board, to meet at his official residence, Gracie Mansion.

His executive secretary, William Peer, told reporters afterward, "Many suggestion and proposals were presented to cope with crime in the schools."

A task force of five men met late tonight to draw up the proposals in writing and Peer indicated the program would be announced tomorrow.

BECOMING AWARE

New York newspapers, most of which advocated racial inteegration bills, are now becoming aware of school problems on their own doorsteps.

Also, Sen. Jacob Javits of New York, a civil rights bill sponsor, was quoted today as saying the school situation in New York City is "deplorable."

The grand jury, under direction of Judge Samuel Leibowitz, is recommending that policemen be stationed in all schools having trouble with teen-age criminal.

RESISTS PROPOSAL

Supt. William Jansen has resisted this proposal, but has finally allowed policemen to be stationed in 41 schools. Jansen complained that Judge Liebowitz called him an "arrogant, pompous, swellheaded—." Liebowitz has denied saying this.

While the committee was drafting proposals tonight, Mayor Wagner was scheduled to be the guest of honor at a "victory champagne party" given by the N. Y. State Committee on Discrimination in Housing to celebrate the recent passage of a New York City ordinance against segregation in privately owned housing.

This bill stirred up great resistance among New York real estate owners and was modified to remove jail penalties for those who refuse to rent to minority groups.

Text of School Board Plan on Crime

Following is the text of the Board of Education's statement yesterday on juvenile delinquency in the schools. It is an outgrowth of two meetings held Monday at the request of Mayor Wagner between city and school officials.

Publicity given to recent incidents within and near our schools has made it appear that our children are lawless and irresponsible. The fact is that the number of children who create problems is less than 1 per cent of our total school pipulation. They constitute a hard core of young people who require special attention, guidance, treatment and, in some cases, custodial and corrective care. The Board of Education recognizes and accepts its responsibilities to these children.

At the same time, it points out that delinquency among the young is not a modern phenomenon, that it springs from no one cause and is susceptible of no one cure. No level or group of our society is immune from it. While it is perhaps more apparent in a big city such as New York because of the large numbers of people and the relatively small areas involved, it is evident in substantially equal intensity throughout the nation.

Problem Outlined

In its basic elements it is a reflection not of the schools but rather of the society in which it exists. The problem, and its solution, are the joint responsibility of the entire community: the family, the churches, the school, the Government at al levels, the social agencies and of every individual citizen. Together these can solve the problem provided there is full recognition by the whole community that there is no substitute for the principles of religion and morality.

The primary concern of the Board of Education is, of course, the pupils and in this framework, it is our responsibility to set forth the role which our schools can play in helping t meet the problem. Our schools have almost 1,000,000 pupils. In a system of this size there are, of course, some who are in need of greater personal assistance than can reasonably be made available in every school. They require a considerable amount of service from guidance counsellors, psychologists, social workers and psychiatrists, as well as remedial teachers and close cooperation with the home.

Separation of Pupils

At the same time, some of the these students are a disruptive influence in the regular classroom. Clearly, for the good of both, they should be separated from the normal group of children. It is believed that many of these students can be handled in special day schools with adequate facilities, and at the same time return to their respective homes at the close of school each day.

There are others, who, in the opinion of school officials, cannot be rehabilitated unless they are removed completely from their home environment. For such students, custodial institutions must be provided. It is recognized that the present available facilities are inadequate, and the judges in the various courts are now making a survey in order to report on the amount of additional facilities that must be provided as quickly as possible.

The board has repeatedly pointed out that discipline does not begin and end at the school door and that proper respect for law and order is the responsibility of the family and of all authorities who have to do with the daily life of the child. As the result of the Board of Education's meeting on Monday, Feb. 3, with Mayor Robert F. Wagner on the subject, the following conclusions were reached:

1. The Board of Education will proceed as rapidly as possible to provide six additional special schools, appropriately staffed, to which it can assign those pupils who are serious disruptive elements in the normal school situation.

The Mayor has already been in contact with the Governor and his representatives in an effort to ecures promptly additional correction facilities for those who require removal from normal society. Analysis of the magnitude of the problem is already under way. The Board of Education will support the Mayor, the Governor and the courts in this effort.

3. Pending the availability of these facilities, the Board of Education will give immediate consideration to the problem of the disposition of offenders currently in school. If necessary, changes will be recommended in existing laws.

4. The Board of Education will expand its attendance bureau staff and its counseling, guidance and similar facilities in the field so that these may be readily available at individual schools.

5 The Board of Education will join with the several other bureaus and departments of the city in a continuing effort to bring the full influence of the community to bear in those schools and localities where the problem is most acute.

6. The Superintendent of Schools and the Board of Education will assure teachers and staff of their continuing full support in the strict enforcement of reasonable disciplinary measures.

Mayor Supports Plan

The Mayor supports these proposals and is ready to recommend them for such support and approval as may be required to implement them.

We know that the Board of Estimate is deeply concerned over these problems and can be depended upon for the fullest cooperation in supporting our proposals and actions.

In making these proposals the board is ever mindful of its long-range program for the expansion and improvement of the total educational establishment and the betterment of the compensation and working conditions of its staff.

PANEL ON SCHOOLS NAMED BY MAYOR TO HALT VIOLENCE

Suggestions Due Tomorrow —Jansen, Theobald and Adams Among Group

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

Mayor Wagner yesterday commissioned a group to draft a program for dealing with crime in the schools.

Stepping into a heated controversy between the Board of Education and a Brooklyn grand jury, the Mayor met for two hours with school officials.

After the meeting at Gracie Mansion it was announced that the group would meet later last night and again today at City Hall to put the proposals discussed into preliminary form. A statement detailing the steps that were under consideration was expected to be issued from the Mayor's office some time tomorrow.

Members Listed

The Mayor named as members of the group Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools; Francis W. H. Adams, former Police Commissioner and now a member of the Board of Education, and Deputy Mayor John J. Theobald, who will succeed Dr. Jansen in September.

Also in the group are William R. Peer, executive secretary to the Mayor, and Harold F. Hay, secretary of the Board of Education. Others may be called into the group tomorrow, it was announced.

Eight members of the Board of Education, Dr. Theobald, Dr. Jansen and ten members of his staff attended the Gracie Mansion meeting yesterday. Mr. Peer said the meeting discussed the "general situation" in the schools, including the program of special schools for problem children.

Extra Schools Asked

The Board of Education now has five of these schools and has asked the Mayor and the city to provide funds for six more, at a cost estimated at nearly $500,000.

Mr. Peer said that "many suggestions and proposals" had been made in the two-hour meeting. The job of the group, he said, would be to "draft the first phase of the program discussed" and present it as a series of proposals.

Mayor Wagner called the meeting with school officials after the Board of Education had adopted a statement accusing Judge Samuel S. Leibowitz of "grossly" misrepresenting its operations and of "gross abuse and personal attack" on its members.

The board also charged in its statement that George Goldfarb, a junior high school principal who committed suicide last week, had been threatened with indictment on unspecified charges.

A Kings County grand jury, on instructions of Judge Leibowitz, has been investigating juvenile violence in the Brooklyn schools, particularly at the John Marshall Junior High School, where Mr. Goldfarb was assigned.

Incidents at that school have included the reported rape in the basement of the school of a 13-year-old girl.

The grand jury defended its action in a statement denying it had threatened Mr. Goldfarb and saying it was being "maligned" by the Board of Education officials.

In calling the meeting with the school officials the Mayor said the "rough talk" between the board members, Judge Leibowitz and the grand jury would have to be ironed out among them. The meeting, he said, was only to discuss the "general situation" in the schools.

Ministers Pledge Aid

Thirteen Negro and white ministers serving in and around the Bedford-Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn sent the Mayor a telegram at Gracie Mansion while the meeting was going on.

The ministers pledged their cooperation with the Mayor and with the Board of Education to make the schools "better and safer planes in which to educate our children."

They deplored, however, "headline-seeking adventurers who would disrupt our schools —and who by innuendo are attempting to place a racial connotation on recent unfortunate events in our borough."

Children of various races were among the victims and the perpetrators of crimes in the area, the telegram said, but there was no evidence that the crimes were conected with racial tensions.

"We hope that at your meeting today," the telegram ended, "there will be common agreement that a school budget much larger than that requested by the Board of Education be agreed upon to give our children the guidance, teaching, smaller classes, remedial facilities and community center activities which they so desperately need."

Teachers Give Views

Another telegram was sent to the Mayor during the meeting from Abraham Lederman, president, and Rose V. Russell, legislative representative, of the Teachers Union of the City of New York, independent.

That message also urged more funds for the city's schools—$30,000,000 for teachers' salary adjustments and $20,000,000 for more personnel, services and supplies.

The telegram deplored the "ostrich attitude" of Superintendent of Schools Jansen and "his self-serving boast" that the city's schools were now better than ever before.

"There is grave danger that in the feud between supine school authorities and a sensation-seeking grand jury the children and the schools will be forgotten," the telegram said.

"In your confidence this afternoon we urge you to bear in mind that the problem of wayward pupils and what to do about them is part of the larger problem of what our city must do for all its children," the union officials said.

"In coping with crime in the schools," they added, "we ask you not to forget the overwhelming majority of the children in our schools who are being cheated daily of their educational birthright by short-sighted, penny-pinching budgets."

The grand jury, which has been investigating violence in Brooklyn schools since Nov. 6, was not in session yesterday. Since November it has been meeting twice weekly. The grand jury is headed by a real estate broker and composed mainly of business men and merchants.

Board members who attended the conference with the Mayor yesterday, besides President Silver and Mr. Adams, were Charles F. Rank, Cornelius J. Walsh, Mrs. Cecile Ruth Sands, Andrew G. Clauson Jr., Vito F. Lanza and Charles J. Bensley.

The only member of the board who was not present was the Rev. John M. Coleman of Brooklyn, the board's only Negro member. Mr. Coleman was not present, either, at the board meting Jan. 23 when Dr. Goldfarb reported that he had been threatened with indictment, or at the meeting Jan. 31 that "fully endorsed" Dr. Jansen and Mr. Silver.

Members of Mr. Silver's staff who were present at the meeting, in addition to Mr. Hay, were Dr. William A. Hamm, associate superintendent of child welfare; C. Frederick Pertch, associate superintendent of the high school division; Dr. Joseph Loretan, associate superintendent of the junior high school division; Dr. Claire Baldwin, assistant to Dr. Jansen.

Also Morris Krugman, assistant superintendent of the guidance division; Dr. Frances Wilson, assistant director of the guidance division; Arthur Clinton, director of attendance; Charles Gilman, administrator of business affairs, and G. Gary Sousa, law secretary to the board of superintendents.

Violence in the Schools

Times — New York

An Analysis of Pupil Delinquency And Steps Taken to Cope With It

2-13-58

By LEONARD BUDER

The recent outbreak of violence in the public schools has caused harried city officials, worried parents and others to ask: What can be done about the problem of crime in the schools? The Board of Education yesterday offered one answer. The board said that starting today all pupils arrested on charges of violence or insubordination would be suspended from school. The schools have previously had to accept pupils who have been placed on probation by the children's courts, pending disposition of the cases.

A News Analysis Article

This major change in policy is intended to put some teeth in the board's program, announced on Tuesday, for coping with pupil delinquency. Other changes in school policy are reported to be under consideration.

The new measures, as well as other steps previously announced, are aimed at the hard core of delinquent pupils. Their number has been estimated at less than 9,500—but their harmful influence is said to exceed their size.

School officials have long recognized the need for special measures to handle difficult pupils. The important thing, they have said, is to remove them from regular classrooms where they disrupt the education program and, even worse, sometimes menace the safety of other pupils and the teachers.

Other Steps Studied

The new policy will give the schools the means for expelling, at least temporarily, the most serious disciplinary cases. For other delinquents, whose actions may not be serious enough to warrant commitment to correctional institutions, the board is making further provisions.

Funds have been asked for six new schools for problem pupils. These schools would have facilities for 1,200 to 1,500 pupils. At present, the city now has five such special schools with a combined enrollment of 1,200.

The schools—called "600" schools—have been criticized in recent months. Two officially commissioned reports—one by the Mayor and the other by the school board—are divided on the question of whether any more 600 schools should be opened. Both reports agree, however, that the existing 600 schools must be improved and strengthened.

Many persons concerned with the problem are advicating still another measure for dealing with hard-core delinquents. They favor lowering the age at which those youngsters who have no interest in education, and are disruptive influences, can go to work.

Children are now required to attend school until they are 16 years old except for those who are severely disabled either mentally or physically. The new ing the compulsory attendance age insists that permitting these youngsters to quit school may make matters easier for the schools but it would not solve the over-all problem of juvenile delinquency. In fact, the argument holds, these youngsters might cause even more trouble because they would be entirely free of supervision.

Opponents of plans to lower the school age declare that 14 proposal is that the age limit be lowered to 14 or 15.

The argument against lower- and 15 year olds would have difficulty in obtaining employment, assuming that they would want to go to work.

"If legislation were passed enabling these young people to leave school," the National Child Labor Committee says, "we think it would result in children out of school and out of work. Wouldn't these idle young people be even more prone to delinquent behavior?"

But there are other aspects to the problem of violence in the schools. Many of the most serious incidents have been committed by "outsiders" who invade school premises—offenders who are beyond the control of the discipline of the school system.

Police Patrols Backed

The special Kings County grand jury investigating lawlessness in Brooklyn schools has recommended the stationing of policemen in difficult schools to cope with this particular problem. The Board of Education, while opposed to the general idea on the ground that the schools would be surrendering their authority over their pupils, has left the matter up to the individual principals. A total of forty-one principals so far has requested police assistance.

Another suggestion that has been advanced to meet this problem would establish a special school police force—similar to the women traffic guards. The special force would be composed of retired policemen and firemen who would serve for a few hours each day at schools in their own neighborhoods.

Another major aspect of the delinquency problem in the schools concerns the prevention of crime and the maintenance of effective discipline among the 99 per cent of the children who are not regarded as hard-core offenders.

This is regarded as the long-range need by many civic and educational groups in the city. It can be accomplished, they say, not by emergency measures aimed directly at delinquency but by a comprehensive plan to improve school programs, services and staffs.

A basic feature of such a plan would be to provide salaries high enough to attract competent teachers and to end the current teaching shortage. A good teaching staff, these organizations say, would be able to maintain discipline in the classroom by constructive educational means.

Negro Children Finish First Year In Mixed N. C. Schools

By THE ASSOCIATED RESS

The words probably did hurt a little but there were no sticks and stones for the handful of Negro children who broke the public school color line for the first time in North Carolina history last fall.

Mostly disregarded, occasionally welcomed, jeered by a few—they finished in a calm that contrasted sharply with the storm aroused by their entry last year.

One girl, 15-year-old Dorothy Counts of Charlotte, withdrew after a week of spitting and heckling from her white classmates at Harding High School.

But the other youngsters in Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem, stuck to their lonely paths. Several did very well. Most were described as average students by their school principals.

"It was fairly easy for me to go to school," said Gustavus Allen Roberts, the only Negro student among 1,600 white pupils at Charlotte's Central High School.

"I didn't have much trouble. I would rather go there. I learn more than I would the regular way. I'll be better prepared for college. I want to be an electrical engineer."

In the "regular way," Gus would have attended Second Ward Negro high school where he was a B student his sophomore year. He did not make a C average his first semester at Central although he pulled his grades up to C in the second half.

"Central was harder," he said.

Gus, who cannot remember how many times he has been called "black boy" at Central, is going back next fall for his senior year.

"He was a student at Central High School just like any other student," said Principl Edward Sanders. "I never did see him engaged in any social activities. He always seemed to be alone. But then, I saw him in the halls between classes when everybody was hurrying."

Sanders said he had not heard anyone say anything "out of the way" to Gus since the first days last fall.

Asked if he had made any close friends at Central, Gus replied:

"I wouldn't say that. I spent most of my time studying. I was working too hard for school activities and I couldn't have done them anyway. I didn't have a C average.

"No, it wasn't lonesome. I wasn't nervous. There was nothing to be nervous about."

Gus' younger sister, Givaud, was not home to comment. She has been reassigned to Piedmont Junior High where she was in the eighth grade this past year, the only Negro among 600 students.

"She's doing okay. I imagine her grades fell between B and C plus — an average student. We didn't have a bit of trouble," said Principal Donald Newman.

At Alexander Graham Junior High, Delores Huntley attended the seventh grade as the only Negro among 400 students. The last week, she walked past an eighth grade boy in the hall.

"Hi, Nigger," he said.

The day before, it was an eighth grade girl who greeted her:

"Hi, Buckwheat."

She heard such greetings almost daily for a year, but was offered no physical abuse. Some classmates were kind.

"She was about average," said Principal Frank Motley. "She had no incidents at all. She played on the girls softball, volley ball and basketball teams.

"She ate in the school-cafeteria with her own homeroom group and seemed to get along well with the others.

"When I told her she had been reassigned to Second Ward (a Negro high school) next fall, she seemed happy."

Alexander Graham is being abandoned and the school will be farther from Delores' home than the Negro high school.

Charlotte School Supt. Dr. E. M. Garinger said the Charlotte school year was peaceful.

"I have nothing to tell you. We treated them as we would any other children. We've had nothing unusual since that one case last fall (the heckling of Dorothy Counts at Harding High School.)"

At Winston-Salem, Gwendolyn Yvonne Bailey completes her junior year Tuesday at Reynolds High School as the only Negro.

"She is getting along well. Her grades are very good," said Principal C. R. Joyner.

At Greensboro, where the largest number of Negroes were integrated, Josephine Boyd graduates Tuesday from Greensboro Senior High School. She is the only Negro among 1,900 students.

Josephine has been on the school honor rolls for several months. Neither she nor her principal could be reached for comment.

Greensboro's Gillespie Park School has had five Negroes attending classes among its 800 students. Its principal refused to comment on their standings.

The five are Brenda Florence, fifth grade; Jimmy Florence, sixth grade; Russell Herring, seventh grade; Elijah Herring Jr., ninth grade; and Harold Davis, eighth grade.

Court Rejects N. C. Negro's School Bid

RALEIGH, N. C. Sept. 1 (AP).—A Federal district judge today rejected a fourteen-year-old Negro boy's suit to break segregation barriers in Raleigh's public schools, but left the door open for further court action.

Judge Edwin M. Stanley said that Joseph Hiram Holt jr. and his parents had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies under North Carolina's pupil assignment act.

The youth applied more than a year ago for admission to Raleigh's all-white high school. The Raleigh school board rejected his application, and the Holts filed a Federal suit.

Judge Stanley said the youth would have to go back to the Raleigh board and exhaust his administrative remedies before coming back to Federal court with his plea.

Burn 2 Crosses On School Lawn

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Sept. 5 (AP).—Two crudely constructed crosses were burned on the lawn of the R. J. Reynolds High School here last night. Earlier in the day the school admitted a Negro student for the second year.

Police Chief Jim Waller said the crosses apparently were the work of pranksters.

24 Negro Pupils Seek Admission at Havelock

By J. GASKILL McDANIEL.

NEW BERN—Individual typed and signed applications from 24 Negro students residing in the Craven Corner section of Craven County have been submitted to the County Board of Education here requesting reassignment to the white Havelock High School.

Most of the applying pupils have been attending Queen Street Negro High School in Beaufort. Exceptions are elementary students entering high school, after attending a private school at Craven Corner during the past year.

Negro children in the Craven Corner and Harlowe area, near the Carteret County line, have long attended the Queen Street High School, while white children living in the same area have attended the white Beaufort High School.

Two Years Ago

Havelock white high school, opened two years ago, had a student body of 231 last year, and was badly overcrowded with children living in the immediate Havelock area. A similar jam is expected in September.

Robert L. Pugh, superintendent of Craven County Schools, said Thursday that he had no comment to make on the 24 applications, pending the next meeting of the County Board of Education on the first Monday in July.

A number of Jones County pupils attend school in Craven County at Dover, while some of Beaufort County's students attend school in Craven County at Vanceboro.

It is considered probable here that the mass reassignment request is an outgrowth of discontent voiced by Negro families in the Craven Corner Community when consolidation affected their Craven Corner Elementary School last year.

The Craven Corner school had eight grades until the consolidation. The first four grades were retained. Craven Corner pupils in the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades were reassigned to the newly built Negro Godette School, constructed at a cost of $150,000.

Unhappy about this transfer to the nearby Godette School, parents of approximately 20 Negro children started their own private school at a Craven Corner church.

There are 4,767 white children in Craven County schools and 2,514 Negro children. This is the first time that a Negro pupil in the county has sought admission in a white school.

North Carolina Graduates Its First Integrated Negro

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Josephine Ophelia Boyd, who wanted to do what couldn't be done, Wednesday night became the first Negro to graduate from an integrated public school in North Carolina.

The 18-year-old honor student discounted the eggs that were thrown at her the first week, and said, "It was the most valuable year of my life."

"I found," said the poised, petite girl, "that if you don't pay any attention to people they soon get tired of being silly.

"I was frightened the first day," the only Negro among the 1,900 students at Greensboro High School said in an interview, "but two or three weeks later it was like going to any other school. There were very few unpleasant instances and I thank God for it."

At the beginning of this school year, three of North Carolina's largest cities admitted a handful of Negroes to previously all-white public schools. Greensboro admitted six, Charlotte five and Winston-Salem one. Catholic schools, which have been integrated for a number of years, have graduated Negroes previously.

"I had no idea I would be accepted," Josephine said, "but I had wanted to go ever since seventh grade. I'd always heard it couldn't be done. I wanted to do what couldn't be done."

Josephine has taken the college board examinations and has been accepted at Clark University in Worcester, Mass.

Negro Quietly Gets Diploma

GREENSBORO, N. C. (AP)—To an 18-year-old honor student graduating Wednesday night from Greensboro Senior High School the words of City School Supt. Ben L. Smith had a special meaning.

He told the graduates to be ready to stand for what they thought was right, no matter what it cost them materially.

Then, with the others, Josephine Ophelia Boyd received her diploma.

She thus became the first Negro to graduate from an integrated public high school in North Carolina.

There were no incidents. The girl was the target of eggs last fall in the first week of school.

Negro Students Seek Transfer

GREENSBORO (UPI) — Reliable sources told United Press International Tuesday that "a number" of Negro students have requested reassignment to white or predominently white schools here for the school term starting this fall.

But Greensboro schools officials declined to confirm the report. Schools Asst. Supt. Phillip J. Weaver said no announcement "of the number of types" of reassignment applications would be made until all such have been processed.

A source who declined to be identified said "there have been a number of applications" by Negroes for reassignment to white schools. He added that he did not have the exact total.

The source said at least four applications by Negroes have been filed with the School Board asking that the students be reassigned to predominently white senior high school here. "There may be more," he added.

Tuesday was the deadline for reassignment applications in Greensboro. But school officials said some such applications may have been mailed at the last minute and that they might arrive at the School Board office as late as Thursday.

For this reason, officials added, no announcement of applications was made at the school board meeting here Tuesday.

One board employe said "All the reassignment applications haven't been tabulated yet."

A total of six Negroes were admitted to previously all-white schools here last fall — five to Gillespie Park Junior and Elementary schools, and one to Senior High. The Senior High Negro, Josephine Ophelia Boyd, became the first Negro to graduate from an integrated public school in the State when she received her diploma at the end of the past school year.

A total of 36 Negroes already have applied to Charlotte, Mecklenburg county and Winston-Salem school boards for reassignment to white schools this fall.

Negro Girl Receives N.C. High Diploma

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Josephine Ophelia Boyd, who "wanted to do what couldn't be done," became the first Negro to graduate from an integrated public high school in North Carolina Wednesday night.

The 16-year-old honor student discounted the eggs that were thrown at her the first week and said "It was the most valuable year of my life."

"I found," said the poised, petite girl, "that if you don't pay any attention to people they soon get tired of being silly.

"I was frightened the first day," the only Negro among the 1,900 students said in an interview, "but two or three weeks later it was like going to any other school. There were very few unpleasant instances and I thank God for it."

At the beginning of this school year three of North Carolina's largest cities admitted a handful of Negroes to previously all-white public schools. Greensboro admitted six, Charlotte five and Winston-Salem one. Catholic schools, which have been integrated for a number of years, have graduated Negroes previously.

"I had no idea I would be accepted," Josephine said, "but I had wanted to go ever since seventh grade. I'd always heard it couldn't be done. I wanted to do what couldn't be done."

Josephine has taken the College Board examinations and has been accepted at Clark University in Worcester, Mass. She plans to attend that school unless she gets a scholarship to Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.

Durham Segregation Trial Delayed

Negro Pupil's Request Denied

Federal Judge Rules in Raleigh, N. C., Case

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The South's tinderbox of litigation over racial integration of public schools flared briefly Monday at Raleigh, N.C., a new spot.

U.S. Judge Edwin M. Stanley denied Joseph Mirath Holt Jr., 14, a Negro, an order for admission to the all-white Needham B. Broughton High School.

He said that when the school board more than a year ago refused to assign Holt to the school and set a hearing on its action, Holt and his parents should have appeared with evidence to support his application.

Instead, the judge noted, a lawyer represented the Holts before the school board and they appealed to the federal court.

NOT EXHAUSTED

Hence, Stanley held, all state measures for gaining admission to the school had not been exhausted as required under legal procedure.

The court delayed entering its decree for 10 days to allow a written notice that remaining state remedies will be tried. Resulting legal processes would extend well beyond Wednesday's school opening in Raleigh and leave the North Carolina capital's school fully segregated for the new term.

The white school is two miles nearer the Holt home than the Negro school which the youth would attend.

Limited integration already has taken place without conflict at the other major North Carolina cities of Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem. A total of 13 Negroes has been accepted for white schools in these cities for terms beginning this week compared with 11 last year.

OMINOUS QUIET

Elsewhere on the integration-segregation front there was quiet, although a bit ominous in places.

At Norfolk, Va., police were alerted against agitation by outsiders. This is a critical point in the integration conflict since 17 Negroes are scheduled for assignment to white schools on Sept. 8 — a step that under state law means the automatic closing of the schools.

There were no developments in Arkansas, where like Virginia, a showdown is in the making.

At Gulfport, Miss., Clennon King, a Negro minister, announced that he would attempt Tuesday to enroll his 6-year-old daughter in an all-white school. Gov. J. P. Coleman said the effort would be blocked and that King, who has been embroiled in racial disputes elsewhere, should know it.

Mayor R. B. Meadows Jr. said no outside help would be accepted in dealing with King, indicating state intervention was not wanted. The mayor said Gulfport racial relations are good and nobody, white or Negro, wants integration

From Wire Dispatches.

DURHAM — A federal court showdown on the legality of North Carolina's laws and attitudes concerning the school segregation issue was postponed Friday until at least the beginning of next year.

The hearing, originally set for Friday in Durham's Middle District courtroom, was put off when Negro attorneys presented interrogatories, or requests for information from their opponents, the Durham City School Board and the State Attorney General's office.

The long delay resulted from the heavy schedule of federal court Judge Edwin Stanley, hearing cases both in his own Middle District and in the Eastern District.

It appeared likely the suit, brought by two Durham Negro mothers on behalf of their student daughters, would come up for trial after the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals rules on a Raleigh segregation case involving local administration of the state's pupil assignment law.

This was considered favorable by Judge Stanley, who said, "I imagine those fellows down there will settle a few legal points."

Holt Case Cited.

Stanley asked attorneys if they thought the Joseph H. Holt Jr., case, in which Stanley denied a Negro student's request for admission to a white high school in Raleigh, had any bearing on the Durham case.

Conrad O. Pearson of Durham, state general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who headed a battery of five attorneys for the Negroes, said "the Holt case does not enter into this matter."

But, Asst. Atty. Gen. Ralph Moody, representing the State, said the Holt case involved a "very pertinent" question of administrative remedies which would have a "direct bearing" on the Durham case.

Stanley, in denying the Holt boy's request, ruled that the Negro had not exhausted his administrative remedies before filing federal suit.

In bringing their suit against the Durham schools and the State, the two mothers, Mrs. Evelyn McKissick and Mrs. Rachael Richardson, challenged directly the school assignment law and other laws enacted by a special session of the General Assembly in 1956.

The laws, commonly lumped together under the term, Pearsall Plan, speeches by Gov. Hodges on the integration question and statements by the State Advisory Committee on Education which framed the laws all come under fire in the Durham case.

Long Conference.

Most of Friday's morning-long session was spent in a conference between opposing attorneys to settle the question of legal stipulations, facts which are agreed on by both sides to avoid the tedious presentment of evidence on obvious issues.

The requests for information as presented by the NAAC attorney of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People either will have to be answered or ruled irrelevant by Judge Stanley.

School Board Attorney Marshall Spears said he would object to some of the questions because, he contended, they were irrelevant.

"They want a great deal of information we couldn't stipulate to," he explained, "because we believe it is irrelevant or incompetent and goes back three years. What we have in this lawsuit is the failure in 1957 of the Durham City School Board to assign these plaintiffs to white schools."

Pearson earlier had said the information sought is relevant and competent because it is essential to his case.

When this matter is settled, the hearing of the case on its merits will be held, with this basic question at the forefront:

Why were the two Negro girls denied admission to white schools?

North Carolina School Enrolls 4th Negro

Charlotte, N. C., Oct. 8 (AP)—A fourth Negro student enrolled Wednesday at a previously white Charlotte public school under the City's program of limited desegregation.

When Fannie Waterman, 10th-grade Negro student, reached Central High School this morning two or three white girls greeted her cordially. One opened the door for her and she walked in without incident. Central seated its first Negro student last year.

Little sixth-grader Nathaniel Abraham entered Shamrock Gardens Elementary School Tuesday, becoming the first Negro to enter a White elementary school here.

Another Negro is at Piedmont Junior High.

Negro Loses Fight To Enter All-White Carolina School

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

A 14-year-old Negro boy failed to win a Federal court order for admission to an all-white Raleigh, N. C., school today in the widening Southern fight over integration.

Judge Edwin M. Stanley refused to direct the enrollment of Joseph Hiram Holt Jr., in Needham B. Broughton High School on the grounds that all state measures for gaining admission had not been exhausted.

Before entering his decree he allowed 10 days for written notice that remaining state steps will be taken toward enrollment. This was taken to mean that at best weeks of further legal procedure might result, extending far beyond Wednesday's school opening and leaving all Raleigh schools fully segregated.

The young Negro more than a year ago had been refused assignment to the all-white Broughton school, which is two miles nearer his home than the nearest Negro school. Instead of appearing with his parents at a school board hearing on the refusal, he was represented by an attorney.

Judge Stanley held that instead of appealing directly to the courts, he and his parents should have presented evidence before the board that his assignment to the school would be in keeping with the state's pupil assignment law.

Limited integration is under way in some other North Carolina cities. Schools open at Charlotte and Greensboro tomorrow and at Winston-Salem Thursday. A total of 13 Negroes have been accepted at white schools in those cities compared with 11 last year. No trouble is expected.

In another sector of the integration vs. segregation front, Police Chief Harold Anderson of Norfolk, Va., alerted his force against racial agitation by outsiders. He said he had under observation two persons who had come in from other cities.

Norfolk is a critical point in the school segregation crisis. Its school board has announced that it will assign 17 Negro pupils to white schools on Sept. 8—a step that automatically will close the schools in keeping with Virginia law.

Virginia shares a top place in the racial crisis with Arkansas whose governor, Orvil Faubus, says only acts of Congress are the "laws of the land" and that Congress has not yet acted on school integration.

Faubus said he would close Central High School in Little Rock "if necessary for the peace and the community" should the Supreme Court order the school integrated.

The court has set Sept. 11 as the date to hear further oral arguments on Little Rock. A bill passed at a special session of the Arkansas legislature would delay opening of Central High until Sept. 15. But Faubus has not signed the measure and the school could open Sept. 8—before a decision by the court.

A somewhat similar situation appeared to be developing in Virginia. Attention there focused on Arlington, where schools open Thursday; Norfolk, where schools are due to start Sept. 8; and Charlottesville, where the school year is now set to begin Sept. 15.

School authorities in all three communities have been ordered to begin integration at the start of the September term by the Federal courts.

In New York, Thurgood Marshall, chief attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he believed Eisenhower was not fully advised when he made a statement on integration.

The President told a news conference last week that he might have said something about going slower on school integration and "I do believe that we should."

Marshall said he was not satisfied with the statement. He said "the President earlier should have made clear . . . that he stands four-square behind the decision of the Supreme Court . . ."

Marshall said he knew of no time "when Vice President Nixon has varied from his forthright stand on individual rights."

High School For Negroes In Jeopardy

By BOB LYNCH.

The State Highway Commission planned a four-lane highway across the grounds of a Wake County school without bothering to notify county school officials, school superintendent Fred Smith said Monday.

"I don't know why they didn't pay us the courtesy of letting us know," Smith told the Wake Board of Education Monday.

The Wake County schools superintendent produced maps that he obtained from the State Department showing that the Highway U.S. 1 bypass will cut directly across the grounds of Berry O'Kelly High School for Negroes off U.S. 1 west of Raleigh.

It was the consensus of board members that if the Highway Commission proceeds with its plans, loss of the land to the school would force the School Board to abandon it as a school site.

Smith told the board that he learned of the Highway Commission's plans to build the four-lane highway across the school property quite by accident.

Additions Planned.

The school board has been planning certain additions to the high school, which has an enrollment of 219, for some time. Smith said he learned of the Highway Commission's plans while visiting school premises in connection with proposed school expansion.

Smith pointed out Berry O'Kelly School has only 10 acres of land and would have less than eight after the highway cuts across it.

"The right-of-way of the highway would be only 60 feet from the proposed site for a new building," Smith said. The board plans to build a physical education and cafeteria building or buildings on the school property.

"We need to buy property, not lose it," Smith said.

Smith said he took the matter before the State Board of Education's Division of Schoolhouse planning and that body agreed that cutting across the school yard with the four-lane highway would render the site useless.

He told the board he hadn't time to get a ruling from the State Attorney General's office on whether the Highway Commission has the right to take school property for a highway.

To Request Hearing.

The board voted as one to have school attorneys write to the Highway Commission and register the board's opposition to the proposed taking of the school property and to request a hearing on the matter.

Board Chairman, C. V. Whitley of Zebulon said he didn't suppose the Highway Commission would buy the entire school site and enable the board to move the school.

Smith said he felt sure the Highway Commission wouldn't do this. "It would cost them too much," he said.

"I have been told and have reason to believe they can acquire other land," Smith said. He added, "In order to keep from buying Herring Sash and Door property, they moved to one side on to Meredith College property and on Berry O'Kelly School."

Construction of new buildings at the school the board said, will have to be postponed until after something definite is settled on the highway matter.

Board members expressed the opinion that the highway also would jeopardize the safety of school children.

School Named For Red Springs Principal

By NAN BULLOCK.

RED SPRINGS—J. T. Peterson who has been the efficient principal of the Red Springs Colored School and one of the town's valued citizens for the past 26 years, was honored by the Board of Education of the Red Springs City Schools recently when the name of the school was changed to Peterson High School.

"Professor Peterson," as he is known to all, has been one of the town's best citizens during his life here. In addition to his valuable contribution to the education of the children and young people of his own race, and the constant upbuilding of the standards of his school, he has been a leading factor in promoting and maintaining the excellent relationship which exists between the two races.

When he came to Red Springs in 1932, there were seven teachers, six classrooms, and 231 students in his school. Today there are thirty classrooms in a modern plant which includes high school and primary buildings, an up-to-date cafeteria, gymnasium with adequate dressing room facilities, and a modern agriculture building, all with complete and adequate equipment. The school has 32 teachers and an enrollment of 942 students, and is rated as one of the best schools in southeastern North Carolina.

Professor Peterson was honor guest at a special surprise program in the school auditorium recently—a program which had as its theme, "Honor to Whom Honor is Due." Red Springs' Mayor, R. D. McMillan, Jr., welcomed the guests, who included a number of leading white citizens of the town.

NEGRO STUDENT FINISHES WORK

Greensboro Girl First to Graduate From Integrated Secondary School

GREENSBORO (UPI) — Josephine Ophelia Boyd of Greensboro wrote another page in North Carolina history Wednesday night by becoming the first Negro to graduate from an integrated secondary school in the State.

The 18-year-old girl who withstood jibes and egg-throwing last fall when she lowered the color barrier stood alongside her white classmates in cap and gown to receive her coveted high school diploma in ceremonies at senior high school here.

The slim, quiet-spoken Negro girl was one of 11 of her race to be admitted to previously all-white schools in Greensboro, Winston-Salem and Charlotte last fall for the first time. She was the only one scheduled to graduate this year.

Her entrance last fall into the school alongside 1,900 white students was hardly peaceful, although there was no violence. She was subjected to many jeers and catcalls, and became the object of an occasional egg-throwing incident, during the early weeks of the term.

But things gradually settled down and the remainder of the school year passed uneventfully. It was a happy Josephine Boyd who received her diploma Wednesday night—happy for having done "what some said couldn't be done" and happy for having had the chance to gain valuable first-hand experience she feels will be of value in her later life.

Eight Negro Pupils Seek Winston-Salem Transfer

WINSTON - SALEM (UPI) — Eight Negro students Friday requested reassignment to white or predominently white schools in Winston-Salem for the school term starting next fall.

The announcement was made by Winston-Salem schools, supt. A. Craig Phillips.

Phillips said five of the Negro pupils asked for transfer from Negro Atkins High to predominently white Reynolds High School here for the coming year.

Three others, he said, requested transfer from Negro Diggs Elementary School to White Easton School.

Phillips declined to release the names of the Negro students. He said school authorities will examine the reapplication requests and decide whether to grant them later.

One Negro student was admitted to white Reynolds High School here last year to mark the first time that racial barriers had been lowered in Winston-Salem schools.

At the same time, six Negroes were admitted to white schools in Greensboro and four to white schools in Charlotte.

Charlotte and Mecklenburg County school officials already have received at least 28 applications from Negroes wishing transfer to white or predominently white schools in the city and county. However, no such applications had been received to date by the Greensboro school system.

Negro Graduated From Integrated Carolina School

GREENSBORO, N. C., (AP). —To an 18-year-old honor student graduating last night from Greensboro Senior High School, the words of City School Supt. Ben L. Smith had a special meaning.

He told the graduates to be ready to stand for what they thought was right, no matter what it cost them materially.

Then, with the others, Josephine Ophelia Boyd received her diploma.

She thus became the first Negro to graduate from an integrated public high school in North Carolina.

There were no incidents. The girl was the target of eggs last fall in the first week of school. She said she was frightened the first day to be the only Negro among 1,900 students, but she added:

"I found that if you don't pay any attention to people, they soon get tired of being silly."

Greensboro was one of three large North Carolina cities to admit a handful of Negroes to previously all-white public schools.

Catholic schools have graduated Negroes previously.

Local Integrated School Graduates Three Negroes

By BILL WOMBLE

Three Negro students, the largest number yet to graduate in a single class, received their diplomas Sunday night in Raleigh's only integrated high school—Cathedral Latin Roman Catholic High.

The trio brought to four the number of Negroes who have finished here since integration was ordered in 1955. Last year, one girl was in the Senior Class, the first of her race to graduate at Cathedral.

The three this year, all girls, were: Claristeen Blackwell, Charleen Marie Keck and Delores Ann Smith. In all, there were 16 in the graduating class.

Waters' Order

The Most Rev. Vincent S. Waters, Bishop of Raleigh, was the second Catholic prelate in the country to order desegregation in his parochial schools. He limited it to high schools. The Catholics have three other schools here, all elementary, and there is no integration in any of them. One is all-Negro, the other two all-white.

Saint Monica's is the Negro school, located on New Bern Avenue at Tarboro Road. The white schools are Sacred Heart, located on the same grounds with Cathedral Latin, and Our Lady of Lourdes, in Anderson Heights, a new and handsome plant which includes the school, church and a quarters for sisters teaching there.

As is customary, Bishop Waters himself presided last night at Cathedral Latin's commencement. He handed out diplomas as the graduates, one by one, filed before him, knelt, and kissed his ring.

The Rt. Rev. Monsignor Herbert A. Harkins, pastor of Sacred Heart Cathedral and head of the two schools there, presented the graduates.

Integration of Cathedral Latin was accomplished with but few early incidents, none of them serious, and Negro students have since been accepted by fellow white students with no protests.

Other 1958 graduates: Arthur C. Ball Jr., Fran Marie Birch, John T. Bode, Paul W. Brant, Whitney H. Diggett Jr., Darrow Ransdell Johnson, Annie Marie Jonas, Susanna Mary Kulash, Marilyn Alicia Pleasants, Mary Ann Reinmiller, George Earl Spencer, Henry J. Sullivan and Alexander J. Synowiez Jr.

Two Negro Pupils To Return To Charlotte White Schools

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Two Negroes, among four who broke the color line in Charlotte city schools this year, will return to white schools for the coming year.

The city school board, which met Friday, assigned almost 30,000 students to schools for next year along racially segregated lines except for the two Negroes.

A Negro boy, Gustavus Roberts, who attended white Central High School and his sister, Girvaud, who attended white Piedmont Junior High School, will attend those same schools during the 1958-59 year.

A Negro girl, Delores Huntley, who attended white Alexander Graham Junior High School was reassigned to a Negro school. The junior high will be abandoned this summer and all its pupus were reassigned.

The fourth Nergo, Dorothy Counts, assigned to a white school for 1957-58, dropped out under student harassment after the first week of classes.

limited integration.

Two Negro children entered the white schools they previously attended without the minor demonstrations which accompanied the start last year. Four Negro youngsters began classes in white schools then.

Police Patrol Area

Gus Roberts, 17, walked to Central High school, entered a side door, and went to his 12th grade home room. Most of his white fellow students already were inside. Several plainclothes policemen and one uniformed highway patrolman were in the area. No one spoke to the tall, slender boy.

His sister, Girvaud, 13, entered 9th grade at Piedmont Junior High at the same time, also without incident.

Another Quits

One of the other two Negro children who attended white schools here last year was reassigned to a Negro school when the white school was abandoned. The other quit after student harassment.

The school board refused to assign additional Negroes to white schools this year, but further hearings are scheduled.

At Greensboro, N. C., five Negro children assigned to the white Gillespie Park school attended Wednesday's brief opening session without difficulty.

Show KKK Banner

A small group of demonstrators displaying a Ku Klux Klan banner and a Confederate flag gathered in front of the school. When the five Negro children arrived a white man carrying the KKK banner followed them a few steps up the walk and one by-stander heckled them briefly.

Otherwise their entrance and departure was without incident.

The demonstrators included the Rev. George Dorsett of Greensboro, the chaplain of a Greensboro Klan group.

Three of the five Negro children who entered Wednesday attended the Gillespie Park school last year, the first year of integration here.

City School Supt. P. J. Weaver said two other Negro children who attended the white school last year and were assigned there again this year were reassigned to Negro schools at the request of their mother, Mrs. Howard Florence. She gave no reason for the request.

He said the children, Brenda and Jimmy Florence, were reassigned and attended Negro schools Wednesday.

Several uniformed men were directing traffic and there were a few small groups of adults gathered across the street, apparently merely curious.

NEGRO STUDENTS RIOT

Hundreds Join In Disorders At Oklahoma City

OKLAHOMA CITY, May 29.—(AP)—Hundreds of students at Booker T. Negro Junior High School rioted at noon Thursday, it was the last day of school.

Fifteen police, scout cars and several fire companies were called to quell the 20-minute disturbance. Firemen turned water hose on the students.

No one was hurt. The students threw bricks, ballbats, broken desks, chairs, books and other objects.

The riot apparently started during an assembly. Principal William W. Johnson could give no cause for the outburst. He called police as the students got out of hand.

Oklahoma Has Only 35 All-Negro High Schools

OKLAHOMA CITY. — (UPI) — Only 35 all-Negro schools remain in Oklahoma and 20 of these are in all-Negro districts, a state report shows.

Dr. Oliver Hodge, state superintendent of public instruction, said 8,350 Negroes are now attending school with whites in 190 high schools, 101 junior high and 168 elementary schools.

This is more than one-fifth of the state's Negro school children.

Integration is now in effect in 62 of the state's 77 counties.

When the U. S. Supreme court handed down its historic decision in May, 1954, there was no integration in Oklahoma except on a college level. There were 96 high schools, 15 junior high and 229 elementary all-Negro schools.

Today, all that remain are 35 high schools, seven junior high and 135 elementary schools.

Today, all that remain are 35 high schools, seven junior high and 135 elementary schools.

There are 1,700 more Negroes attending integrated schools this year than last, and 24 Negro schools have been abolished in the past year.

Since the U. S. Supreme court decision, 94 Negro elementary, 8 junior high and 57 high schools have been closed as the result of integration.

Hodge said this has resulted in 344 Negro teachers losing their jobs, 46 of them in the past year.

Negroes now attend school with whites in 353 of the state's 1,499 districts.

Of the remaining 35 Negro high schools, only 15 are segregated by choice of local authorities. The remainder are in all-Negro districts.

Hodge estimated that from 37,000 to 40,000 of the state's 522,000 children of school age are Negroes. He said an accurate figure is not available, because the state no longer keeps a separate count on white and Negro children.

Pupils Unaware Of Bomb Hunt

Thirty-six hundred students at Olney High School went about their scholastic routine yesterday morning unaware that detectives were making a feverish search for a bomb, which was reportedly "planted" in the building at Front st. and Duncannon ave.

The search followed a telephone call at 10:05 A. M. to the police radio room in City Hall by a "John Zachary," who gave a nonexistent address of Clarkson ave. near 2d st.

Sgt. Elwood Sickenberger, of the Northwest Detective Division, rushed to the school with a group of detectives and searched the building from "top to bottom" for an hour and a half before deciding that the call was a fake.

Sickenberger said the search was conducted quietly to avoid possible panic among the students. It was the first bomb scare in the city since Feb. 4 when two bombs were reported hidden in City Hall, police said.

NEGROES LOSE SCHOOL CASE IN PENNSYLVANIA

(WASHINGTON. — (UPI) — The Supreme Court Monday denied a hearing to a group of Negroes in Darby, Pennsylvania, who object to the location of a new $1,887,000 junior high school.

Darby constitutes a single junior high attendance area. Most of the township's Negro population is concentrated in the lower section where the present inadequate junior high school is located.

The complainants have already lost in two lower Federal Courts in a lawsuit to bar further action of any kind in connection with the proposed new school.

They contend Negro children would have to ride two miles or so by bus to get to the new building. But Federal District Judge J. Cullen Ganey, of Philadelphia, said some one was going to have to travel by bus no matter what site was chosen.

Darby is separated by the boroughs of Collingdale, Sharon Hill and Folcroft.

Ganey's judgment dismissing the complaint was affirmed Feb. 5, 1958, by the Third U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Both courts pointed out that when the township school district board chose the site in 1952, all members present were Negroes.

The Negro complainants also objected to a school administration plan for Delaware County. The plan carried Darby Twp. and Darby Borough in a single unit, even though they are separated from each other, with Collingdale, Sharon Hill and Colyn in another unit. The first has a large Negro population, while the second is predominantly white.

The plan is now being revised and is not at present a factor in the lawsuit.

Negro Group Hears Needs In Schooling

ORANGEBURG (AP) — The United States must re-orient its educational concept and revamp its education program to meet a current crisis, Negro high school counselors and school officials were told Friday at the seventh annual State College guidance conference.

Dr. Ambrose Caliver, assistant to the commissioner and chief of the Adult education section, U. S. Office of Education, said the crisis in education has resulted from failure to keep pace with changing times, especially in scientific and technological developments.

One of the major characteristics of these changes, Caliver said, is the increase "in the gap between material progress and social and moral development."

He said the crisis has resulted in a rude awakening to the "real fundamentals of education."

The conference got under way this morning with an address by Mrs. Alberta Grimes of Sterling High School at Greenville. She spoke on "Current status of guidance services in the schools of South Carolina."

Dr. Boyd D. Lyles, state supervisor of guidance services, discussed guidance trends in South Carolina at the afternoon session.

Police Keeping Eye On Trouble Spot

By COYTE WHITE
News and Courier Staff Writer

Charleston Police yesterday put a trouble spot near a city high school under close surveillance but discounted reports of mob violence.

Police Chief William F. Kelly said only two Negro teen-agers were arrested in the wake of an incident at King and Grove Streets Wednesday night.

Said Chief Kelly: "We have no evidence that a mob attack was involved." Instead, the chief said police believed only several Negroes were directly involved in a disturbance in which two white teen-agers were roughed up.

Chief Kelly said reports to police indicated three Negroes girls were involved in the beginning of the row. Later, he said, several other youths joined them.

NUMBER PRESENT

He said detectives reported a total of 10 to 15 Negro youths present during the ruckus but that several of them were spectators, and not involved directly.

The two white youths, identified as Dreyfus and Nancy Browder, reported they were attacked about 8 o'clock as they returned from a school pep rally.

Chief Kelly said both were given emergency room treatment at Roper Hospital and released.

The chief said earlier reports that neither of the Browder teenagers required hospital treatment were in error. He said he was "misquoted" in a newspaper account of the row yesterday.

Kelly said the two arrested Negroes were James R. Cummings, 16, and Dorothy Cummings, 17, of Page Court. Both were sentenced to $50 fines or 15 days in city police court after being convicted of disorderly conduct and assault.

The police chief said eight Negro youths were rounded up after the incident. However, only two were charged. They were identified in a line-up at city headquarters.

Chief Kelly flatly denied that a "gang war" situation existed. He said the incident appeared to have erupted from agitation on the part of both white and Negro youths as a result of a previous incident.

"I'm not going to minimize this incident," said Kelly, "but I'm certainly not going to allow it to be magnified beyond all proportion.

"My detectives tell me there was nothing organized about this incident, and that it was apparently spontaneous, and as an apparent result of a disturbance which occurred Tuesday in front of the high school.

DISPERSE GROUP

"Several policemen dispersed a group which had gathered during that incident. However, no one was arrested."

Chief Kelly said he believed such rows sometimes orginate from minor incidents occurring outside school hours in the city.

The chief said he planned to confer with city school officials concerning the situation.

'Pennies' offered for bombed school—

Clinton board charges White House heave-ho

CLINTON, Tenn., Oct. 10 — (AP) — An Anderson County school board member has accused White House officials of proffering pennies instead of dollars to help the board repair dynamited Clinton High School.

R. G. Crossno pondered another trip to Washington, this time to see no one less than President Eisenhower.

Iks's assistants, he said, gave the Clinton County officials a "run-around, heave-ho, pass-the-buck."

The criticism of federal attitudes typified the board's stand since the school was integrated under federal court orders in 1956, which is that the board will obey the law, but the federal government must accept the responsibility for what happens.

Crossno recommended to fellow board members at an emergency session Thursday night that they return to Washington and try again to talk face-to-face with the president.

CROSSNO LED a delegation of four county officials who flew to Washington Wednesday. They conferred with presidential aids and came away with the promise of limited federal aid for the restoration of the building. The promise came from U. S. Education Commissioner Lawrence Derthick.

The men did not, as they had hoped, see Eisenhower himself.

Crossno said, "They are offering us pennies. What we need is dollars. What we can expect from their proposals is chicken feed. It looks like we'll need at least $300,000."

Contacted at Kirksville, Mo., where he had a speaking engagement today, Derthick said no funds were promised the board, but "we are trying to find a way to help."

"WE HAVE SENT a representative from the Atlanta regional office to make an on-the-spot survey of the situation," he said. "We hope we can find a way legally to help them. We couldn't go beyond the laws concerned."

Derthick said Clinton School now receives about $100,000 a year in federal aid under a law providing aid for operation of schools having federally connected children as pupils.

Three pre-dawn dynamite blasts caused that much damage Sunday to the racially integrated school.

Board Member O. C. Mayes said:

"INTEGRATION OF OUR schools by court order has caused the building to be blown up, and it is the responsibility of the federal government."

Francis Moore, board chairman and Clinton police chief, said this expressed the sentiments of the entire board.

Moore said the county carried $73,000 insurance on the building and a claim for that amount has been filed.

"We were country boys who got their experience when we went to Washington," Crossno declared. "When we go back, things will be handled a little different."

It was disclosed in the meeting that private donations, some with strongly pro-integration or anti-integration letters, are pouring in from all parts of the nation. But Crossno advised the board to be cautious in accepting them because of the sentiments they may express.

HE IS UNALTERABLY opposed, he said, to rebuilding the high school as "a memorial to integration or to segregation or to preserving law and order by enforcing integration under court order."

In Washington, Rocco Siciliano, presidential aid who met with the Clinton delegation, said he was astonished by Crossno's complaint.

"It was a very friendly meeting and there was no indication whatever at the time that the group was in any way dissatisfied with the outcome," Siliiano said.

FBI To Assist Clinton Probe

Agent On Scene In Tennessee

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5 (UPI) —The FBI has launched an investigation into the explosions which blasted the integrated Clinton, Tenn., high school, Director J. Edgar Hoover announced tonight.

Hoover said J. C. Gearthy, agent in charge of the FBI's Knoxville office, has arrived on the scene to take charge "of all investigative efforts that may come within the jurisdiction of the FBI."

The Knoxville office covers the Clinton area where pro-segregationists were blamed with touching off the blasts.

Hoover also said he had extended to local Tennessee authorities the full facilities of the FBI laboratory in an effort to track down the persons who touched off the explosions.

Clement Rushes To School's Aid

Says Classes Will Resume Tomorrow—Huddles With County Authorities

From The Commercial Appeal
Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Oct. 5. — Gov. Frank Clement and Anderson County officials conferred here Sunday to assure students at explosion-torn Clinton High School they can return to their studies Monday.

Following a 45-minute conference with state and county authorities, the Governor told newsmen: "Monday is when children go to school and the children of Clinton are going to school. We're not going to let three sticks of dynamite replace the three R's."

Didn't Discuss Integration

He said segregation and integration at the 850-student school were not even discussed during the conference.

Mayor R. G. Crossno of Norris, near Clinton, who is a member of the county school board, said there are presently 10 Negro students enrolled in Clinton High and added, the school "will be operated as in the past."

Clinton High students will meet at 8:30 Monday morning at the gymnasium and instructions will be given them and teachers at that time.

Mayor Crossno and the other officials—Francis Moore, chairman of the county school board and Clinton chief of police; County Judge J. D. Yarnell; County School Supt. James Newman, and Dudley Human, Clinton High School principal—were undecided where classes will be held.

Clement Takes Steps

Governor Clement outlined these steps he has taken:

1. He has ordered the Tennessee Bureau of Criminal Identification to send agents to the school. They will remain there "as long as is necessary."

2. He has offered the maximum reward of $5,000 for information leading to arrest and conviction of those who planted the explosives.

3. He has offered school authorities "any and all state personnel necessary to continue school operations.

4. He has sent T. Wesley Pickel, co-ordinator of the Division of Transportation and School Buildings for the Education Department, to Clinton to aid local authorities.

Clinton High's Students Will Use Vacant School

CLINTON, Tenn., Oct. 6 (AP)— Clinton High School's white and Negro students bounced back lustily today from the dynamite blasts which ripped into their school plant before dawn yesterday.

They cheered, whistled and clapped loudly as Supt. James A. Newman and Principal W. D. Human told of plans to move all 850 of them to a vacant grade school building at nearby Oak Ridge, probably by Thursday.

"We've been knocked down, but we're not out," said Human, to the obvious delight of the assembled students, including 10 of the 11 Negroes. About 95 students, including one of two Negro boys, were absent.

FBI Goes to Work

But even as the students bounced, the FBI set up shop in a vacant office across the street from the shattered school and began working in typical closed-mouth fashion to find the dynamiter.

Rewards totaling $60,700 have been offered for the arrest and conviction of the dynamiter. The State of Tennessee posted $5,000, and officials of 47 Southern cities have a standing offer of $55,700 for solution of any Southern bombings relating to integration.

Officially, chief agent Gerald Gearty said, the FBI is here to determine if the blast violated any federal law. But it was obvious that in so determining, agents are gathering evidence which it hopes will help in the state investigation.

Facilities Available

Gearty said all FBI facilities and personnel will be made available to local authorities to aid them in the inquiry. Police Chief Francis Moore, who is also chairman of the Anderson County

Government To Help Clinton Rebuild Bomb Wrecked School

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — nesday to try to help Clinton, of its bomb-wrecked integrated

U. S. Education Commissioner Lawrence Derthick ordered Edward Paulette, Atlanta, Ga., field representative of the Federal Office of Education, to go to Clinton within a few hours after the meeting.

Derthick said Paulette would survey the Clinton situation with an eye toward providing federal funds to help rebuild the school.

Derthick and two White House aides met with four officials from Anderson County, Tenn., which operated the high school that was dynamited early last Sunday.

R. G. Crossno, a member of the county school board, told newsmen after the two-hour meeting that the government promised Wednessee, pay for reconstruction high school.

"we are satisfied with the conference so far."

"But we're hurting now and we want relief," he said.

Derthick said he thought the federal government could supply part of the estimated $300,000 needed to rebuild the high school.

The money would be provided under the government's special aid program for schools crowded by children of federal employees or workers connected with federal projects.

The Clinton school already qualifies for such aid, Derthick said. But he said an on-the-spot survey would be needed before the government could promise a specific amount to help rebuild the school.

The school, with an enrollment of 859, white and 11 Negro students, was ruined by three pre-dawn dynamite explosions. The Clinton students temporarily will attend a vacant school at nearby Oak Ridge, Tenn., site of a key atomic energy plant.

Crossno was backed up by Frank Wilson, acting attorney for the school board, County Judge J. D. Yarnell, and School Board Member O. C. Hayes.

Presidential assistants Rocco Siciliano and Edward McCabe represented President Eisenhower at the meeting across the street from the White House.

Clinton Asks U. S. Aid To Repair High School

By Richard L. Lyons
Staff Reporter

Clinton, Tenn., asked for Federal aid yesterday to repair its dynamited high school but chances of getting any substantial amount appeared slim.

U. S. Office of Education officials said the principal program that could provide construction funds is that which helps build schools in areas with large numbers of children of persons working on Federal installations. A check of enrollment figures by the Office of Education indicated Clinton does not qualify under that program, they said.

Nearly one-fifth of the students in Clinton and surrounding Anderson County come from families employed by the Federal Government. The county receives Federal school operating aid for them under a companion program. But to qualify for construction money the number of federally connected students must be increasing, and in Clinton the figure is dropping.

"There's no leeway in the law," said B. Alden Lillywhite, who has helped administer the program since it began. "There doesn't look like a chance of getting money there."

However, U. S. Commissioner of Education Lawrence G. Derthick said he would send a man to Clinton immediately to determine whether Clinton can meet the qualifications.

Lillywhite said Federal operating aid given Anderson County might be used to help repair the school. But that would not be enough and would cut into other parts of the school budget. The education law enacted at the last session of Congress might provide minor aid to equip science laboratories, said Lillywhite. The President has a disaster fund, but he usually reserves it for catastrophes such as floods causing widespread devestation.

Clinton's high school was torn apart by three separate dynamite blasts, causing damage estimated at $300,000. Local officials believe the blasts were set off as a protest against admission of 11 Negro students. Students have been attending classes in makeshift quarters for the last three days but today will take over an empty Government-owned school at Oak Ridge, about 10 miles away.

Four Anderson County officials flew here yesterday to ask President Eisenhower for help with their problem and to urge a program, such as Federal insurance, to help communities meet acts of terrorism and other problems caused by school desegregation.

They didn't see the President. But they met for two hours with Derthick and with two of the President's special assistants, Rocco C. Siciliano and Edward A. McCabe, in Siciliano's office.

The Clinton delegation consistedof two School Board members, R. G. Crossno and O. C. Mayes; the acting County attorney, Frank Wilson; and Judge J. D. Yarnell.

Crossno said the school was not insured against explosion. He said he doubted that it could be in view of trouble stirred up by John Kasper and other racial agitators in Clinton during the last two years.

The letter to the President expressed the School Board's determination to keep its schools operating and to carry out the court-ordered desegregation program.

Clinton School Aid Plan Riles Board

CLINTON, Tenn., Oct. 9 (AP)— An official who went to the White House to seek—and receive —federal aid in restoring bombed-out Clinton High School today recommended "a return trip to call on the big ears." He meant President Eisenhower himself.

R. G. Crossno, Anderson County school board member, loosed his blast at what he termed an official "run-around, heave-ho and pass the buck," as students of the school resumed classes at nearby Oak Ridge.

The white and Negro students made the six-mile trip in a segregated school bus caravan to their new, integrated school and were greeted by an unexpected, musical welcome from the 90-piece Oak Ridge High School Band.

Crossno led a four-member delegation from Clinton to the White House yesterday. The men conferred with presidential assistants Rocco Siciliano and Ed McCabe, and came away with a promise of limited federal aid from U.S. Education Commissioner Lawrence Derthic.

Crossno told fellow board members in an emergency meeting that "we need to move over about 100 yards (to the President's office) from where we were yesterday.

"They are offering us pennies. What we need is dollars. What we can expect from their proposals is chicken feed. It looks like we'll need at least $300,000."

Three pre-dawn dynamite blasts caused that much damage Sunday to the racially integrated school.

The amount of federal aid will await a report from Edward Paulette, field representative from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Paulette flew here from Atlanta to inspect the damage, but said he would say nothing until his report reaches Washington.

Board member O. C. Mayes, who accompanied Crossno on the trip to Washington, added: "The people of Clinton are not begging for anything. But integration of our schools by court order had caused the building to be blown up, and it is the responsibility of the federal government."

Chairman Francis Moore, who is also Clinton police chief, commented that this "expresses the sentiments of the board." The board took no action, however, regarding a second trip to Washington.

It was revealed at the meeting that donations are pouring in from all over the nation to help repair the building. But Crossno recommended that the members "sleep on the question" and consider accepting the donations cautiously."

He said he was unalterably opposed to rebuilding the high school as "a memorial to integration or to segregation or to preserving law and order by enforcing integration under court order."

4 Anderson County aides promised aid

WASHINGTON

Four officials of Anderson County, Tenn., were promised Federal aid Wednesday to help rebuild Clinton High School, which was wrecked by three dynamite explosions before dawn Sunday, Oct. 7.

Dr. Lawrence G. Derthick, commissioner of education, told reporters that he was directing a field representative of the United States Office of Education to go from Atlanta to Clinton to make an on-the-spot survey to determine how much aid to which the school is entitled under Public Law 815.

Public Law 815 authorizes Federal grants for school construction in areas where Federal activities place a burden on the public schools.

THE AMOUNT of money which the Federal Goverment would grant for rebuilding Clinton High School would depend on the number of children who reside on Federal property with a parent employed on Federal property. It also depends upon the number of children one of whose parents live or work on Federal property, or the number of children of immigrant workers required by plants having defense contracts.

The maximum allowance for pupils who reside on Federal property with a parent employed on Federal property is figured at an estimated average cost of $1,118 per child.

ANDERSON COUNTY officials flew here from Knoxville and conferred for more than an hour and a half with Rocco Siciliano and Edward McCabe, members of the White House staff, and Dr. Derthick.

President Eisenhower had asked his two aides to see the Anderson County officials. Dr. Derthick was called in. Mr. Siciliano handles minority group problems at the White House.

The Anderson County officials who came to Washington were Acting County Attorney Frank Wilson, School board members R. G. Grossno and O. C. Mays, and County Judge J. D. Yarnell.

THE DELEGATION brought with them a letter addressed to President Eisenhower asking for Federal aid for rebuilding the school. The group, however, did not ask for any suspension of integration at Clinton High School.

Mr. Grossno told reporters that there were three reasons for the delegation's visit to Washington:

1. The general purpose was to discuss ways and means of developing a program for Federal assistance in meeting emergencies and financial burdens imposed on local communities as the result of integration under Federal court orders.

2. The specific purpose was to seek to obtain financial assistance from the Federal Government to rebuild and reopen Clinton High School.

3. To get Federal authorities to consider legislation to offer some form of insurance against such acts of terrorism.

THE CLINTON High School had $73,000 of fire insurance on it, but nothing against explosions.

The extent of the damage is still not known. The FBI had not yet completed its search for evidence within the building and school authorities were being kept out of that portion of the building where the investigation was not yet completed.

The building was built 30 years ago at a cost of $750,000 and was originally designed for 650 students.

Several additions since then have brought the pupil capacity to 850. It is a sprawling brick structure built on a slope and has two stories at the low end and one story at the upper end.

Money pours in for Clinton as voters express opinions

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5—In only about one-half the area of the world today, can free elections be held. We are lucky.

And, despite some graft here and there, despite the influence of big campaign contributions, and last-minute accusations, our elections usually represent a pretty accurate, healthy cross-section of American opinion.

While Americans were voting or making up their minds how to vote, another healthy phenomenon was taking place in America which you don't find in some other parts of the world—an outpouring of money and sympathy from all sorts of people for the children who were bombed out of their school at Clinton, Tenn., and the synagogue which was dynamited in Atlanta, Ga.

In Atlanta a public school had suffered a fire some years ago, and the synagogue opened its doors for the children to study there. So, after the synagogue was dynamited, the children of this school dipped into their savings banks and gave $600 to the synagogue.

Fortunately, the synagogue was insured. But that $600 from the children of the Atlanta public school actually meant more in friendship than an insurance policy.

So did the vigorous reaction of all the people of Atlanta, and meanwhile, out in Yreka, Calif., Joey Nichols, president of the Yreka High School student body, pledged a "Coke for freedom of education" from 625 students and citizens of Yreka to help rebuild the Clinton schoolhouse in Tennessee.

Yreka, in Northern California, is a long way from the foothills of Eastern Tennessee, but the kids of Yreka High wanted to contribute the cost of a brick each, which is about the same price as a Coke, to help rebuild the Clinton school.

ALL SORTS OF heartwarming messages have come to the Clinton school, from all sorts of people and from all over the U. S. A.

Here are just a few of them:

An old dishwasher, Reno, Nev.—"Have read Pearson's column. We in this old U. S. A. will take care of our own when they deserve it."

Mrs. G. A. Romano, San Diego—"Please accept this check from my family of five. my children wish we could all do more."

Robert and Joanne Oberhards, Arlington, Va.—"In a world filled with hate, we the school children of today must demonstrate that there is still hope in salvaging the brotherhood of men. We are raising our voices in defiance of the hate-mongers and bombers by contributing our Coke money to help rebuild your school."

C. N. Fox, Atlanta, Ga.—"Sorry I cannot give more to help rebuild your edifice of learning that ignorance destroyed."

Mrs. Florence Johnson, New York—"My little girl, 7 years old, prays that Clinton will have another fine school and hopes her contribution will help make it possible."

Mrs. Donald W. Sharp, Fairfax, Va.—"This is not much but perhaps it will help rebuild your school. I am so sorry this fanatical thing happened to a community that is trying to live right and do right, and I hope it won't discourage your boys and girls. Most of the rest of the world sees Clinton, Tenn., as a place where people are reasonable and sensible and good, and it is too bad that a few fanatical outsiders (surely) were able to commit such an enormous crime."

ONE OF THE earlier offers of help came from Aubrey Galyon, secretary of the Buildings Trade Council of Knoxville, just 20 miles from Clinton, and from David Parks, Southeastern representative of the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasters to contribute labor to rebuild the school.

This will be not only a sizeable gift, but means a real sacrifice because labor has been partly unemployed in East Tennessee and this is how the American people react when other people suffer from fanatics and hate-mongers.

NOTE — Contributions to help rebuild the Clinton school house can be sent direct to the Clinton School House, Clinton, Tenn.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, our ambassador to the United Nations, wants a new, more glamorous job with the elections over. He has one eye on the post of ambassador to France, though his secret ambition is to succeed John Foster Dulles as secretary of state . . . Dictator Khrushchev has become so missile-minded he has assigned his own son to work in a missile laboratory.

Speaker Sam Rayburn has assured worried Southerners he won't let the Democratic liberals, with a big gain in the new Congress, take over the House. He will juggle committee appointments, he says, to keep control in the hands of the same conservative Southerners who have been running the House for the past decade.

The British are urging the United States to take a more realistic attitude toward Communist China now the elections are over. Foreign Secretary Lloyd passed on this advice to Secretary Dulles when he stopped off in London en route to Italy and Formosa.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER had to order Secretary of the Navy Gates to promote Adm. Rickover, father of the atomic submarine. At first, Gates sided with the admirals who don't like Rickover's unorthodox behavior and background (he's the son of a Polish pants presser in Chicago).

At one point Secretary Gates complained to friends that Rickover had caused him so much mental anguish that he once absentmindedly ordered Rickover for lunch.

Sen. Clinton Anderson of New Mexico is quietly investigating reports that Adm. Lewis Strauss sought his appointment as secretary of commerce in order to promote the peaceful development of atomic power by the private utility companies. Anderson will cross-examine Strauss sharply when he comes up for Senate confirmation.

Clinton High school paper's editorial blast shows fervor

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—In the entrance hall of the bombed-out Clinton (Tenn.) High School when I visited it last October was a placard which read: "Welcome, freshmen! The Dragon's Tale 10 cents."

Surrounded by broken glass, twisted lockers, and shattered plaster, that sign still stood, announcing the beginning of the new year for the school paper.

Publication of the Dragon's Tale was necessarily suspended after the Oct. 5 explosion, but recently a new issue hit the newsstands of Oak Ridge and Clinton.

PEARSON

That issue is symbolic—symbolic of the determination of youth, the teachers and the school board of Clinton not to be deterred by hate. The new Dragon's Tale is replete with cartoons, photos of sports events, and such snappy headlines as "SENIORS SWOON OVER CLASS RINGS."

It also tells in a front-page editorial the story of the school's comeback.

In these days when the American people face a battle of wits from the toughest competitor we have ever known, the editorial is worth noting:

"Once again our school and community have found themselves in the nation's spotlight, . . . Two years ago emotions and prejudices were so strong that this paper did not make any attempt to cover the story. Today's story is different.

"During the past two weeks no inner turmoil was evident inside the school. Upper classmen and faculty felt very hopeful of the coming year. Class and clubs were meeting; activities were being planned; seniors were inquiring about the arrival of their rings. Juniors were talking about their play, and freshmen were becoming an integral part of our big family of 870 students. Sunday, Oct. 5, changed that.

"AT 7:45 A.M. MONDAY, Oct. 6, the faculty met in a dark and cold gynasium—a gymnasium left that way as a result of the bombing. Unanimously the faculty agreed to carry on. When the student body poured in at the regular school hour, spirits were never higher; the student body was never stronger. Somehow we got through the next three hours."

The editor of the Dragon's Tale then recounts in detail the finding of another temporary school at Oak Ridge, 10 miles away, cleaning it out, assigning rooms, finding desks, and opening it in three short days.

At 9:15 a.m. Thursday, Oct. 9, Clinton High School on wheels moved into Oak Ridge. Mixed emotions of sadness and thankfulness were reflected in the faces of those present. For the first time in history (probably) students were delighted to have their books. By Friday, every nook and corner having been inspected, school became school again.

"Perhaps time will erase the initial feeling of loss, the feeling of physical sickness that one or several persons could have so much hate and venom that it would destroy reason and, therefore, valuable property. Out of evil does come good strong school spirit, a feeling of oneness.

"Whoever we are or wherever we may be, as long as there are CHS students to remember, to reminisce and to carry on, the traditions, the spirit, and the real Clinton High School will live forever."

So wrote the editor of the Dragon's Tale, describing a disaster on Oct. 5, 1958, perhaps as serious as the disaster of Sputnik on Oct. 4, 1957. For, on Oct. 5, 1958, fear and hate had crept into the hearts of the free American people.

THERE IS ANOTHER chapter to the Clinton school bombing which the Dragon's Tale hasn't had a chance to cover, but which will be concluded this Sunday, Dec. 14, when Billy Graham holds a big mass meeting in the only high school building left by the dynamiters—the gymnasium.

This chapter is how thousands of other children in other schools throughout the country contributed nickels and dimes to help rebuild the Clinton schoolhouse. That story has been partly told in this column.

It could never be fully told, however, partly for lack of space, partly through inability to describe the outpouring of generosity and sympathy from so many people.

Thanks to this outpouring, and thanks especially to the generosity of the building trades unions which have given the largest contribution of all, and thanks in part to the fact that the government has finally been jogged into parting with some cash, the Clinton schoolhouse will now be rebuilt.

And historians may record that this American determination to continue education in a little town in the mountains of Tennessee was one of the great victories of the cold war.

For whereas people cannot build satellites to compensate for the Sputnik defeat of Oct. 4, 1957, they can and will build a school to compensate for the hate defeat of Oct. 5, 1958.

JONATHAN DANIELS, aid to Harry Truman and now editor of The Raleigh News and Observer, once said: "They never go back to Pocatello." . . . Ex-Sen. "Molly" Malone of Nevada will now live in Washington, D. C., not Nevada.

Defeated Cong. Errett P. Scrivner of Kansas City, Kan., tells friends at Burning Tree Country Club (where Ike golfs) that he is mulling over two or three administration jobs that are to be filled.

Cliff Clevenger of Bryan, Ohio, long known as the leading sourpuss on Capitol Hill, in private life is living up to his congressional reputation. He has moved out of his home district to Tiffin, Ohio. His successor, Delbert Latta, also a Republican, who beat Clevenger's endorsed candidate, has never received a word of congratulations from Crusty Cliff.

Jonathan is right—whether it be Bryan, Ohio, or Pocatello—they don't go home. Maybe that's why incoming congressmen find housing so expensive in Washington.—(c.).

Students Seek Funds for Clinton High

BIRMINGHAM, Mich., Nov. 21 (UPI) — Birmingham High School students have started a "Chip In a Coke for Clinton" campaign to help rebuild the bombed Clinton, Tenn., High School.

The students already have collected $300 from their classmates and are extending the drive to other high schools throughout the Nation.

Under the plan, students are asked to donate a dime to the campaign.

Birmingham's school newspaper, The Highlander, is sending letters to the editors of other student newspapers around the country uring them to join in the drive.

Five journalism students at Birmingham, John Hyde, Ann Lawrence, Mike Forster, Margo Mensing and Jack Mitchell, said they contacted the superintendent of schools at Clinton and learned that $250,000 was needed to rebuild the bombed school.

In an editorial in the Highlander, they said:

"Because of the prejudices of a few fanatics, the Clinton High School was destroyed.

"What was gained by turning this quiet high school into piles of useless rubble and depriving the Clinton teenagers of proper education?

'Why must teenagers like you and me go without a high school?

"Was it their fault?"

"No, it was caused by a few narrow-minded individuals who can't understand what the United States really stands for and are governed only by their hates and prejudices.

". . . We, you and I, can rebuild Clinton High School. Each of us will only have to give up the price of one coke. That's all, just one coke, and we can buy the bricks to rebuild Clinton."

The way little people chipped in for Clinton school is big story

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13 — In the past two years there have been a total of 84 schools and places of worship bombed or dynamited in this land which guarantees free education and freedom of religious worship. The bombings range from a synagogue in Atlanta to Jehovah's Witnesses in Boston.

The bombings also range from Clinton High School in Tennessee to the Osage, W. Va., Junior High School, to countless threats, scares and rumors which have sent children scurrying out of buildings all the way from Peoria, Ill., to Arlington, Va.

GRAHAM

Sen. Estes Kefauver, returning from a NATO conference in Europe last week, said:

PEARSON

"People just can't understand these bombings. They tell me, 'Of course, you spend a lot of money for underdeveloped countries, but at the same time you kill school children and worshippers. You have lots of money but you have no heart.'

"These bombings," worried Kefauver, "have hurt us abroad more than any other single development in recent history."

THE REV. BILLY GRAHAM, who has caused millions of people from Madison Square Garden to Latin America to think more about their God and their fellow men, today will commemorate an occasion when a lot of Americans thought about school children and the problem of hate.

He will preach a sermon in the unbombed gymnasium not far from the bombed-out schoolhouse at Clinton, Tenn., giving thanks for the pennies and nickels, the dimes and dollars that have poured in from school children and plain people from Venezuela to Hawaii, from Maine to California, to help rebuild the Clinton school.

If Billy Graham had a chance to read the letters that have accompanied these dimes and dollars, he would not have to write a sermon. The letters themselves would be a sermon. Or if the Voice of America could broadcast these letters to our critics abroad, there might be better understanding of the fact that Americans do not live for hate.

The Voice might also interview a group of students who came to see me from Northwood High School in Silver Springs, Md., bringing a check for $167 for the Clinton schoolhouse.

THESE YOUNG PEOPLE, seven of them, had worked out their collection strategy as carefully as if it were a military campaign. They had borrowed a large display Coke bottle from a local Coca-Cola dealer and hung a sign on it, "Give up a Coke to buy a brick." Then they got permission from their history teacher, Miss Katherine Lynch, who was in on the strategy, to make a financial appeal to every English class.

"We picked the English classes," they explained, "because everyone takes English. That way we covered the entire school.

"Sometimes the kids only had their luncheon or milk money, but they gave it anyway when we told them what had happened at Clinton."

Miss Lynch told me how David Mermelstein had passed the bank at the lunch hour to one 7-year-old who was clasping a thin dime.

"Don't you want to give a dime to the Clinton school?" asked David.

Obviously the 7-year-old didn't.

"I was waiting to buy some candy," he said wistfully.

"But these kids down in Tennessee don't have a school of their own. Don't you want to help them? That dime will buy a whole brick for their new school. You can buy candy some other day."

The 7-year-old put his dime into the bank.

NOTE—The story of a bombed-out building is always news. Newsmen and photographers flocked to Clinton, Tenn., when the school was blown up. It hit the front pages all over the country. The story of a built-up school is not news. It doesn't make for dramatic, gruesome pictures. But the manner in which little people all over the nation chipped in to help rebuild a schoolhouse is, nevertheless, one of the biggest stories in the nation.

THE BIG AIRLINES are quietly prodding Chan Gurney, the stubby little vice chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, to undercut his boss and get himself appointed as CAB chairman.

Behind this battle of personalities is a much more important battle for higher fares. For if Gurney is able to juggle the CAB chairmanship away from James Durfee, the price the public pays for air travel is sure to go up.

Durfee, a Republican from Wisconsin, has been chairman of the CAB since 1956.

But Durfee made the very serious mistake of opposing airline demands for a fare increase. He suggested they could induce more people to fly, thus bring profits up by holding the fares down.

As a result, the big airlines are pulling strings to replace Durfee with Gurney, who favors an increase. Gurney is campaigning for the post as vigorously as he used to run for his old Senate seat in South Dakota. Airline lobbyists are helping him bring pressure on the White House staff.

Meanwhile Durfee has sent word to the White House he will resign from the CAB if Gurney succeeds in taking the chairmanship away from him.

NOTE — Both Durfee and Gurney are Republicans, although the South Dakota lame duck was originally appointed to the CAB by President Truman.—(c).

Dynamiters Wreck School In Tennessee

News & Observer P.1 Raleigh, NC, Mon, 10-6-58

CLINTON, Tenn. (AP) — Three quick pre-dawn dynamite explosions wrecked the interior of racially integrated Clinton High School Sunday. Police Chief Francis Moore said, "It was a professional job."

"There's no doubt," he said, "that this dynamiting is connected with integration of the school."

At Nashville, Gov. Frank Clement termed the blasting "a cowardly act" and offered a $5,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for it. Clinton and Anderson County officials also said they would post rewards, amounts to be determined later.

Clement summoned Anderson County officials to Nashville for a conference on the dynamiting.

It was the first sign of violence at the school, nestled in this Cumberland plateau town of 4,000, since sporadic disturbances broke out when nine Negroes first were admitted along with white students two years ago. Clinton is 20 miles northwest of Knoxville in east Tennessee.

The explosions ripped apart 16 of 20 classrooms in the building. Dist. Atty. Gen. J. H. McCartt, after a personal inspection of the structure, estimated the damage at $300,000. Officials had estimated the 33-year-old building, with several recent additions, would cost at least $800,000 to replace.

The explosives were set off in separate parts of the sprawling brick structure. The blasts shattered walls, cracked support beams, smashed window panes and doors and ripped a hole in the roof.

Classes for 850 white pupils and 10 Negroes were suspended indefinitely.

County Supt. James A. Newman said the Board of Education, which supervises Clinton high, would meet Monday to discuss plans for resuming classes.

Gym Not Damaged.

The gymnasium was not damaged and some classes may be held in it. Principal W. D. Human said four churches offered their facilities for temporary classrooms.

The Tennessee Bureau of Identification and State Highway Patrol entered the investigation.

In Washington, Justice Department officials expressed shock over the incident. But Malcolm Anderson, assistant attorney general in charge of the Criminal Division, said "we would have to have a complete official report before making any statement."

Police Capt. Curtis Rosenberry drove by the school moments before the first blast ripped the stillness of the dark. He said the explosions went off at three-minute intervals beginning at 4:21 a.m.

This was the second school blast in Tennessee. A year ago last September the Hattie Cotton Elementary School in Nashville was damaged heavily by a similar explosion. It came shortly after the first grade of some of the capital city's schools, including Hattie Cotton, admitted Negroes and whites together.

Nine Negroes were admitted to previously all-white Clinton High in August 1956, under a U.S. District Court order. This touched off a wave of violent disorders which brought state troopers and national guardsmen to the scene.

Previous Blasts.

During the next several months the Negro section of Clinton was rocked by eight dynamite blasts. Several persons were injured and some property damaged.

Racial agitator John Kasper, a native of Camden, N.J., was accused of inciting the disturbances.

U.S. Dist. Judge Robert L. Taylor of Knoxville held Kasper in contempt of court in September 1956, for violating a court order forbidding interference with peaceful integration of the school. Kasper was sentenced to a year in federal prison.

In July 1957, Kasper and six Clinton area residents were convicted in federal court of vilating the same injunction. Kasper was sentenced to six months in prison and the others were put on probation.

Kasper was released last Aug. 1 from a federal reformatory at Tallahassee, Fla.

Horace Wells, publisher of the weekly, Clinton Courier-News and one of the first persons to reach Sunday's blast scene, said, "The building is almost a total wreck."

He reported the first blast went off in an inner court leading from a main building to the gymnasium. The gym, a separate building, was not damaged.

The second went off above the basement cafeteria. Wells said it destroyed the whole cafeteria wing of the building.

The third explosion ripped out another end of the building and destroyed the boys' wash room and some class rooms.

"From a quick survey of the damage, I would say it would be quite a while before classes can be resumed at the school," Wells added.

Human, in his second year as Clinton High principal, said, "I haven't the least idea of what could have caused it.

"We have been so quiet at the school. Maybe it was the calm before the storm, but there have been no incidents of any kind reported to me since the Dickey incident."

He referred to Mike Dickey, 16, suspended from the school last Sept.11 after a knife was found in his possession.

Dickey, one of three Negro boys who enrolled in the school Sept. 2, has appealed the suspension to the county school board.

No Unrest Reports.

Mayor T. L. Seeber said he had received no report of any undercurrent of unrest over the school integration.

There was unofficial speculation that the blasts might have been set Saturday midnight. A false fire alarm turned in at that time took firemen and policemen from their quarters across the street from the school to the opposite end of town.

Moore said he had called in the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

He added it had not been determined how the dynamiters gained entrance to the building, which was locked. The explosions blew outside doors off their hinges. This made it impossible to tell whether they had been forced.

Human, who entered the building with deputy sheriffs, said, "All I can say is that it looks a lot worse inside than outside." He shook his head in dismay.

A quick check showed no records were destroyed, Human said.

Ironically, members of the county school board and the county court met Saturday night with county Judge J. D. Yarnell to discuss what steps could be taken to remedy the overcrowded conditions of schools.

A spokesman for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said in New York there would be no comment from the organization "until the whole affair and all the events connected with it have been studied."

Orderly groups of Clinton residents congregated on the sidewalks surrounding the wrecked school building. Some speculated the blasts were caused by a "souped-up" dynamite preparation used in the operation of nearby coal mines.

Moore said the school cost $750,000 when it was built about 30 years ago to accommodate 640 students. There have been additions since. Some insurance was carried on the building, but he didn't know the exact amount.

$300,000 Damage Is Estimated; Reward Offered

Charleston

CLINTON, Tenn. (AP) — Three quick pre-dawn dynamite explosions wrecked the interior of racially integrated Clinton High School Sunday. Police Chief Francis Moore said, "It was a professional job."

"There's no doubt," he said, "that this dynamiting is connected with integration of the school."

REWARD OFFERED

At Nashville, Gov. Frank Clement termed the blasting "a cowardly act" and offered a $5,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for it. Clinton and Anderson County officials also said they would post rewards, amounts to be determined later.

Clement summoned Anderson County officials to Nashville for a conference on the dynamiting.

It was the first sign of violence at the school, nestled in this Cumberland plateau town of 4,000, since sporadic disturbances broke out when nine Negroes first were admitted along with white students two years ago. Clinton is 20 miles northwest of Knoxville in east Tennessee.

DAMAGE HEAVY

The explosions ripped apart 16 of 20 classrooms in the building. Dist. Atty. Gen. J. H. McCartt, after a personal inspection of the structure, estimated the damage at $300,000. Officials had estimated the 33-year-old building, with several recent additions, would cost at least $800,000 to replace.

The explosives were set off in separate parts of the sprawling brick structure. The blasts shattered walls, cracked support beams, smashed window panes and doors and ripped a hole in the roof.

Classes for 850 white pupils and 10 Negroes were suspended indefinitely.

County Supt. James A. Newman said the Board of Education, which supervises Clinton high, would meet Monday to discuss plans for resuming classes.

FACILITIES OFFERED

The gymnasium was not damaged and some classes may be held in it. Principal W. D. Human said four churches offered their facilities for temporary classrooms.

The Tennessee Bureau of Identification and State Highway Patrol entered the investigation.

In Washington, Justice Department officials expressed shock over the incident. But Malcolm Anderson, assistant attorney general in charge of the Criminal Division, said "we would have to have a complete official report before making any statement."

Police Capt. Curtis Rosenberry drove by the school moments before the first blast ripped the stillness of the dark. He said the explosions went off at three-minute intervals beginning at 4:21 a.m.

SECOND TIME

This was the second school blast in Tennessee. A year ago last September the Hattie Cotton Elementary School in Nashville was damaged heavily by a similar explosion. It came shortly after the first grade of some of the capital city's schools, including Hattie Cotton, admitted Negroes and whites together.

$60,700 In Rewards To Spur Hunt For Dynamiter— FBI Bears Down

By The Associated Press

CLINTON, Tenn., Oct. 6. — Students of dynamite-blasted Clinton High School reported for school at the usual time Monday and were assured that their education would proceed on schedule.

They cheered, whistled and clapped loudly as Supt. James A. Newman and principal W. D. Human told of plans to move all 850 of them to a vacant grade school at Oak Ridge, six miles away, probably by Thursday.

"We've been knocked down, but we're not out," Mr. Newman said to the obvious delight of the assembled students, including 10 of the 11 Negroes. About 85 students, including one Negro boy, were absent.

FBI Sets Up Office

As the students assembled, the FBI set up shop in a vacant office across the street from the shattered school and began working in typical, closed-mouth fashion to find the culprit in the blast.

Rewards totaling $60,700 have been offered for the arrest and conviction of the dynamiter. The State of Tennessee posted $5,000, and officials of 47 Southern cities have a standing offer of $55,700 for the solution of any Southern bombings relating to integration.

Officially, Chief Agent Gerald Gearty said, the FBI is here to determine if the blast violated any Federal law. But it was obvious that in so determining, agents are gathering evidence which the FBI hopes will help in the state investigation.

Mr. Gearty said all FBI facilities and personnel will be made available to local authorities to aid them in the inquiry.

Clinton Police Chief Francis Moore said "A few persons were questioned." He said they were the type who are normally quizzed in these cases. He said the questioning was routine.

At the school assembly Monday morning in the undamaged gymnasium, Mr. Human told the students, "The decision has been made to use Linden School at Oak Ridge for our classes. It is a 25-room elementary school which has been vacant. It isn't entirely suited to high school, but we'll make out." The students cheered at the news.

In the meantime, the students will meet at the gym each morning, and then disperse for such activities as band and football practice, chorus and physical education.

Building Prepared

Monday, workmen began preparing the vacated Oak Ridge building. The school, erected in 1944 at a cost of $415,000 was vacated two years ago. It has been maintained on a standby basis.

The explosions, three minutes apart in three separate wings of the school, came during a heavy fog Sunday morning. They caused $300,000 damage to the school.

Clinton, a town of 4,000 in the Cumberland Mountain foothills, is 20 miles northwest of Knoxville in East Tennessee.

The school was integrated racially in 1956 under Federal court orders, and became the first state-supported high school in Tennessee to mix the races. Sporadic violence, fanned by convicted racial agitator John Kasper, accompanied the first year of race mixing, but last year and this had been quiet.

CLINTON'S PUPILS BACK IN CLASSES

Students of Wrecked School Ride to Borrowed Facility in Segregated Buses

By LAWRENCE O'KANE
Special to The New York Times.

CLINTON, Tenn., Oct. 9—Clinton High School students rode a segregated bus caravan today to new borrowed school quarters in Oak Ridge for their first classes since their school was wrecked by explosions last Sunday morning.

Band music, wheeling drum majorettes, speeches by school and communiy officials and patriotic ritual—the raising of a flag, the Pledge of Allegiance and the march "America"—greeted the students at Linden Elementary School.

The majority of the white students arrived in the bus caravan, but others were brought to the school by their parents or drove their own cars.

The eleven Negro students, who had ridden alone in the twelfth vehicle in line, stood in small groups among the crowd.

A Bus is Avoided

Like other students who live out of town, they had boarded the bus near their homes. They remained aboard as it joined fifteen others outside Clinton Hight at 8:30 A. M. Town youngsters who climbed aboard the buses there, avoided the one containing the Negroes.

A school official later explained the original court order ordering integration, which led to violence by segregationists here two years ago, did not include integration of the buses.

School Superintendent James A. Newman deeclared: "There is no plan to integrate the buses."

Led by a police cruiser, the sixteen-bus caravan took twenty-five minutes to drive the thirteen miles to the new school.

For the next few days, school officials said, the student body of 870 would assemble each day outside the wrecked high school and would be dismissed there each afternoon. In time, it is hoped, schedules can be reworked so the students can be taken directly to Oak Ridge.

STUDENTS OF BOMBED HIGH SCHOOL arriving yesterday at borrowed quarters in Oak Ridge, Tenn. They traveled from Clinton, where their integrated school was wrecked, in twelve buses. The eleven Negroes in group rode alone in last bus in line.

The ninety-member Oak Ridge High School band, in cardinal and gray uniforms, thumped and blared as the students alighted.

Appreciation Voiced

W. D. Human, school principal, then expressed Clinton's appreciation for the use of the Federally owned elementary school. Clinton students will use it at least for the remainder of the school-year. The twenty-five-room building, larger than Clinton High, has been vacant for two years, following a reduction of population in the area.

Mark Brady, 17 years old, president of the Oak Ridge High School Student Council, then led Calvin Hill, 16, his Clinton High counterpart and football enemy, to the door of the one-story building. He unlocked it. The students flocked in before young Hill could reply to his well-wishers.

Inside during the day, classes limped along with too few textbooks and improvised visual aids.

While much of this was going on an associate field representative of the Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, was in town pouring over school records to determine how much money Anderson County may receive under existing regulations.

His presence in town followed a dramatic appeal to President Eisenhower for aid in rebuilding the school by county officials.

Florida Detectives Say Clinton Blasts Worst Yet

CLINTON, Tenn. (AP)—Two Florida detectives, here to aid local investigators in the Clinton High School bombing, said the blast Sunday caused the most damage of any integration-connected bombing.

They added that the preliminary investigation shows that it was "one of the most violent in the South to date." It caused an estimated $300,000 damage to the school.

Sgt. J. O. Crews of the Jacksonville Police Dept. and Marvin H. Haynes, Duval County deputy sheriff, conferred with Clinton Police Chief Francis Moore and FBI agents investigating the blast.

They are working through the Southeastern Conference on bombings, an organization of officials in 67 Southeastern cities which has offered a standing reward of $55,700 for the conviction of persons responsible for the integration-related blasts.

The reward applies to the Clinton blasts, along with $5,000 posted by the state of Tennesese.

"We came to bring the local investigators information about other bombings in the South and to brief them on suspects and bombings of the past," Crews said. "We are not investigating the bombing."

"We discussed bombings in Birmingham and Montgomery, Jacksonville and Miami, Fla., Gastonia, N.C., and Nashville, Tenn., with Chief Moore," Hayes added. "We told him of suspects and methods of other bombings in hopes that Clinton will come into the conference."

Jacksonville serves as headquarters and clearing house for the organization.

CLINTON STUDENTS TO GO TO OAK RIDGE

Officials Prepare U.S. School There—F.B.I. and State Press Blast Inquiry

BY LAWRENCE O'KANE

Special to The New York Times.

CLINTON, Tenn., Oct. 6—As state and Federal agents pressed investigations into the three explosions that wrecked racially integrated Clinton High School early yesterday morning, students and teachers worked together today to prepare an abandoned grade school for classes.

It was hoped that the Government-owned Linden Elementary School, ten miles away at Oak Ridge, would be ready for the 870 Clinton High students on Thursday.

The use of the grade school was offered to the county by the Atomic Energy Commission. About two dozen students joined faculty members there today to prepare the building. The A. E. C. schools at Oak Ridge have been integrated without incident for several years.

The students were told of their new quarters at an assembly this morning in Clinton High's bomb-scarred gymnasium. Most of the windows in the big room were shattered by the blasts.

Groups Will Meet

After encouraging talks by W. D. Human, school principal, and James A. Newman, County School Superintendent, the students were released. Some went to football and cheerleader workouts; others went home to Clinton's sunny streets.

Mr. Human said that activity groups would meet tomorrow and Wednesday at the elementary school next door to the wrecked high school, the nearby National Guard Armory and the City Recreation Center.

"Regular classes will not be held," he explained, "because of the difficulty of getting textbooks from the high school."

Even the Thursday opening of the Linden school is problematical, Francis L. Moore, Anderson County School Board chairman, said. Usable desks and textbooks must be removed from the gutted building. The school officials are waiting for the Federal Bureau of Investigation to complete its investigation.

"We have a force of thirty men standing by," Mr. Moore who is also police chief, said "We'll get the new school ready just as soon as the F. B. I. finishes."

Change for Youngster

Clinton is the sort of sleepy little town in which a youngster can wander into the police chief's office during a meeting and ask for change for the soda machine. Chief Moore stopped what he was doing and dug down into his pocket.

Neither the F. B. I. nor the Tennessee Bureau of Identification would offer official comment today on their studies. But it was believed that the F. B. I. was here to determine if any Federal law had been violated.

Other police sources were ready, however, with theories as to the explosive used. One investigator suggested that it was dynamite, because of the smell. Others held out for monabel, a charge used in coal mining operations.

This opinion was based on the fact that the west wing explosion caused only a small fire. Monabel is preferred in mining because it will not produce a flash, it was said. Dynamite does flash and can result in a fire.

The explosions, described as a "professional job" by Virgil Kitts, State Fire Marshal, are believed to have been of segregationist origin. Nine dynamite blasts, the most recent a week ago, have wrecked homes in Foley Hill, Clinton's Negro district, since the high school was ordered integrated, under Federal Court order, in 1956.

STATE CAN'T AID BOMBED SCHOOL

Tennessee Governor Annoyed by Ike Quotes

James Pearman

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Gov. Frank Clement Wednesday told an Anderson county delegation that there was no legal way the state could provide financial aid for bombed Clinton High school.

New Orleans, La.

Clement praised the Anderson county group for their "co-operation and understanding" and criticized the federal government for failure to aid the Clinton school.

R. G. Crossno, member of the Anderson county school board, said the delegation took the position that "it is the sole responsibility of the federal government to provide funds for rebuilding the school. Clement met with the Anderson county delegation and with other state officials for an hours and a half.

Thursday 2-23

"If I had the authority to do so we'd rebuild that school starting today," Clement said. "They are in definite need of about $200,000 or more right now."

Clement said that the group was not able to "come up with a solution to make it legally possible to provide state funds."

He said he would recommend to the next Legislature that funds be provided to "take care of what already has happened." He said he also would suggest that the lawmakers consider the advisability of studying whether to set up a contingency fund for any possible future incidents.

"I was shocked, annoyed and dismayed," Clement said, "to hear the President quoted, and I hope he was misquoted, as saying he couldn't give too much attention to every little leaky faucet that was brought to their attention."

WANTS FEDERAL DOLLARS

"The point is that the same federal government which can provide bayonets and spend thousands of taxpayers dollars when they say you are not upholding the law should oolspkwithymath yon officials who have done their best to uphold the law . . ."

Clement said the Anderson county group "wants federal dollars from the federal court" which ordered them to integrate.

Crossno said that Anderson county officials may make another trip to Washington in an effort to seek federal aid.

"The people of Anderson county don't geel it's their financial responsibility to replace the school," county Judge J. D. Yarnell said.

Clement said Anderson county did not have the funds to replace the school.

SOME PLUMS ON THIS SIDE OF THE SEA

Pittsburgh Courier

But not all of the plums are on the other side of the pond there are a few of the luscious delicacies still hanging to clingin vines in this country, if you can just land them.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Friends of Balius Walker Jr. will be happy to learn that he has landed one of those plums in the form of a traineeship grant offered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Sat. 8-30-58

The grant offers this young man an opportunity to do further study in the field of public health. He will begin his training at the University of Michigan on Sept. 15, and his research work will be accredited toward a master's degree.

P 6

Mr. Walker

We sing the praise of this young man because he is so deserving. Nashville, Tenn., young Balius, whose parents are deceased, desired to obtain an education on his very own. Although there are two good colleges in Nashville, he desired to study away from home so that he could make his own way and not be dependent upon relatives.

He made contacts with officials of a football team from Kentucky State College while it was in Nashville to play Tennessee State. Through this contact he was enabled to enroll at Kentucky State College where he received his M. A. degree in biology in 1954.

Then, like all other young men, he had to answer the call of Uncle Sam. So the next four years of his life were spent in the Air Force where he worked in the Preventive Medicine Division.

Following his stint in the armed services, young Walker was fortunate enough, in this period of recession, to obtain a job in the D. C. Health Department, Bureau of Public Health, on what he called a special summer research project.

So well did he perform his duty that he was recommended for this special traineeship grant which amounts to more than $3,000 and an opportunity to further his education.

Clinton School Aid Promised by U.S.

[illegible], Oct. 8 (UPI)—The government promised today help to Clinton, Tenn., pay the expenses of its bombed high school.

U.S. [illegible] Commissioner Durkheit said he would appoint a field representative to work immediately to help Clinton officials in applying federal funds to the school.

[illegible] and two White House aides met with four officials from Anderson County, Tenn., which owned the high school that was [illegible] last Friday.

[illegible] Owens, president of the county school board, told reporters after the two-hour meeting that "We are satisfied with the conference so far. But we're [illegible] and relief—[illegible] to the tune of [illegible] $260,000 needed to rebuild the high school.

The money would be provided under the government's special [illegible] for schools crowded by children of federal employees or activity connected with federal projects.

The Clinton school already qualifies for such aid, Durkheit said. He said an enrollment survey would be needed before the government could promise a specific amount to help rebuild the school.

The school, with an enrollment of 850 white and 11 Negro students, was ruined by three predawn dynamite explosions. The Negro students temporarily will attend a vacant school at nearby Oak Ridge, Tenn., site of a key atomic energy plant.

Mail Insurance

Crossno and his delegation first asked for help to get the school rebuilt. They also urged that measures be asked for an insurance program against terrorism in integrated school districts.

"We could not get insurance on the school locally under the conditions that we've had for the past few years," Crossno said.

Clinton it was announced [illegible] the banished-out students [illegible] integrated classes [illegible] at disused Linden [illegible] School in nearby Oak Ridge. Buses will transport the white and Negro students to the substitute school.

BOMBED SCHOOL IS GIVEN $45,510

Federal Grant Boosts Total to $144,000

CLINTON, Tenn. (UPI)—A federal grant of $45,510 Friday increased to $144,000 funds available for the rebuilding of dynamited Clinton High school.

The Anderson County (Clinton) school board received $73,000 in settlement of insurance claims and $23,348.24 in private donations.

Supt. James A. Newman said estimates on repairing the school range from $70,000 to $100,000. Three dynamite blasts last Oct. 5 wrecked the interior [illegible].

Secretary of Welfare Arthur [illegible] announced the federal grant in Washington.

He said funds are being provided under a law authorizing grants for construction of buildings needed because of increased school enrollments resulting from federal activities.

Parents of many children enrolled at racially integrated Clinton High are employed in the atomic plants at Oak Ridge, six miles west of here.

"We are very happy to receive this money," Newman said. "Of course, we were hoping to get the full amount of $71,000 we thought we were entitled to. But we certainly can put this money to good use."

Newman said that in addition to money, the school board had received several offers of materials to be used in rebuilding the school.

Clinton High's 850 pupils, including eight Negroes, now are transported by buses to Oak Ridge for classes in a vacant school building there.

$45,510 Allocated To Bombed School

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The federal government Saturday had allocated $45,510 to Anderson County, Tenn., to help rebuild the Clinton, Tenn., High School which was wrecked by a dynamite blast several weeks ago.

Arthur S. Flemming, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said the money would be drawn from a fund set up to help communities which must expand school facilities because of increased federal activities in the area.

Local officials made a special trip to Washington to plead for federal help in rebuilding Clinton High.

VIRGINIA

'That's the price you pay for segregation . . .'

ARLINGTON, VA.— "That's the price you pay for segregation."

That's what Jesse R. Pollard, a PTA representative, told the Arlington School Board at a hearing Wednesday night as it sought to work itself out of the quandary of what to do with its overcrowded Hoffman-Boston (colored) High School.

The board, under Federal court orders to admit seven colored children to its previously all white schools — stayed pending an appeal to the Supreme Court — is trying to decide whether to build an addition to Hoffman-Boston at heavy cost to the county.

The board is worried about what effect the Supreme Court's coming decision will have on Hoffman-Boston, an overcrowded structure with minimum facilities. "It's a problem we'll have to come to grips with sooner or later," one board member said.

MR. POLLARD TOLD the board that $60,000 in bond money earmarked for a five-room addition to Hoffman-Boston just isn't enough. The school needs 10 new classrooms to bring it to 600-pupil capacity. It now has 532 pupils in a facility built for 375.

Although two temporary buildings have alleviated overcrowding somewhat, Mr. Pollard said the school would be 53 per cent overcrowded this year 67 per cent in 1959 and 123 per cent by 1963. The two white high schools are currently 23 per cent overloaded.

Principal George M. Richardson told the board the school has some pupils attending classes in 15 by 20 foot rooms, toilet facilities and the library are inadequate and that other classes are being held in the auditorium and the cafeteria.

Board Backs Effort to Keep Schools Open

Arlington Takes Strongest Stand In Racial Issue

By SAM EASTMAN
Star Staff Writer

The Arlington County Board voted unanimously yesterday to support any legal moves aimed at keeping schools open.

In its strongest stand to date on the school racial issue, the board indorsed a resolution passed by the Washington-Lee High School Parent-Teacher Association last month.

Arlington is under a Federal court order, upheld by the Supreme Court last month, to enroll seven Negro students in white schools. In addition, the school board has received 15 new Negro applications for admittance to white schools this September.

However, one of Virginia's segregation laws requires the automatic closing of schools if integration occurs.

Duty to Explore

In its action yesterday, the board said that it has "the duty to explore every possible legal means of keeping Arlington's public schools open and will actively support any course of action designed to meet that objective."

With its vote, the board indirectly gave its support to a citizens organization, the Committee to Preserve Public Schools, which is being formed with the goal of keeping the classrooms open by legal means.

The resolution did not specify that the board would support such legal moves even if this would mean some integration in the schools.

Asked to comment on this question, Board Chairman Ralph Kaul replied that, "Arlington will have no choice but to obey any Federal court desegration order."

And, he went on, "Regardless of the people's desires concerning segregation or desegration, a way will have to be found to keep the public schools open."

Other Comment

The only other board member available for comment, Mrs. Leone Buchholz, said she would reply to the integration question only by stating that she favors keeping schools open and will support studying legal action aimed at this goal.

The board vote on the school matter was taken without comment. However, an argument developed over another phase of the PTA resolution dealing with criticism of the school system.

The board's two Conservative members, Dr. L. H. Blevins and Mrs. Buchholz, took exception to the resolution's statement opposing "any and all efforts and activities which serve to undermine and discredit" the school system.

Dr. Blevins said he would like to know just who is supposed to be undermining the schools. When someone disagrees with school policy, Dr. Blevins said, he is accused with trying to discredit the system.

The vote was four to one, with Dr. Blevins voting "no." Mrs. Bucholz supported the motion with the statement that she would be opposed to any schoo lundermining activities but that she doesn't know of any which new exist.

The board, also acting on the PTA resolution, backed an earlier school board statement that it would try to keep teachers on the payroll during the forthcoming racial showdown.

In another matter, board members went on record to the proposal by Federal agencies to use the George Washington Memorial Parkway in the access route to Chantilly airport.

The board said this would meau increased traffic along the Arlington portion of the Parkway and that a route along the Potomac would be longer and more expensive than one farther to the south.

Five Students Back At School After "Shoving" Incident

ROANOKE, Va. — (ANP) — Five Negro children, withdrawn from Roanoke Catholic High School and St. Andrew's School after a shoving incident, returned to both schools last week, and there was no trouble between them and the white students.

"Everything was just fine when the Negroes returned. "It was a perfect day in class. You would never know anything had happened," said Sister Miriam, principal.

BOARD WARNS

The board which controls the school had warned that if there was any more racial incidents following the shoving of Vernon Dudley, 17, a senior, the person or persons responsible for it would not get a diploma. The board said it would not tolerate any more racial incidents.

The students, children of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey G. Dudley, Jr., were taken out of classes after a disturbance at the school.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The incident followed an announcement that the senior prom of Roanoke Catholic High would not be held at Hotel Roanoke on May 28 as scheduled.

Vernon reportedly was shoved into his seat by another student. The other four Dudley children are in lower grades.

Sister Miriam said Monday the seniors have not met to decide if they will hold the prom.

The policy-making board of the school had issued a statement giving the seniors the choice of cancelling the prom or holding it on school property with white students dancing among themselves and Negro students doing likewise.

Virginia-Poll Parents Agree To Integration

Majority Favors That Over Closing of Schoo

Charlottesville, Va., June 12 (AP)—White parents facing an integration showdown have voted, 177 to 128, to let their children go to class with a few Negroes here, rather than see the school shut down, it was disclosed Thursday.

However, 138 other parents questioned in the poll did not vote.

The Parent-Teachers Association of Venable Elementary School made public the result of a survey in which parents were asked to choose between a "measure of integration" or a "closed Venable public school."

Thirteen Negro students have applied for September admission to the school under an order by United States District Judge John Paul for Charlottesville to desegregate its schools next fall.

Law Would Close School

If the applications are accepted and the students enrolled, the white parents would face the prospect of losing the public school, regardless of their majority feeling. A Virginia law would automatically close any school in which mixed classes are taught under the State's "massive resistance" to integration program.

Results of the poll were turned over to the School Board Thursday night, but School Superintendent Fendall R. Ellis made no comment.

He said, however, that the board would not consider the applications of the 13 Negroes seeking admission to Venable School, or those of 17 other Negroes who seek admission to other Charlottesville schools, before July.

Norfolk Defers Opening Of Its Nine High Schools

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

The Norfolk School Board Friday postponed the opening of all high schools in that Virginia city for one week while it pushes its legal fight against integration.

The board took the action after U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman refused to delay his 18-month-old order to end segregation in six Norfolk schools. The board is asking the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals to stay Hoffman's order.

Elementary schools in Norfolk will open Monday as scheduled. But the opening date for all secondary schools there — three Negro, six white — was postponed until Sept. 29.

Denies Request.

In Arkansas, U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller denied a request that he order the Van Buren School Board to reinstate integration, halted two weeks ago by a boycott of white students.

The judge told the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People that he felt the school board and faculty members of Van Buren High had done all they could in an effort to carry out integration. But he retained jurisdiction so he can act if the situation does not clear up. The boycott, which kept 18 Negro students out of classes, is over, School Supt. Everett Kelley testified.

School officials in Little Rock, Ark., made plans to begin classes via television Monday for students of four high schools closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to prevent integration.

In the nation's capital, former President Harry S. Truman said the South's integration problems can be solved with common sense and good will. Truman told newsmen that his area of Missouri "is, like my mother was, as unreconstructed as South Carolina." But, he added, Missouri handled its integration without trouble "as did the governor of Oklahoma and the governor of Tennessee."

Meanwhile, many of Dixie's governors turned toward Frankfort, Ky., where the annual Southern Governors conference will open sessions Monday. School integration isn't on the official agenda but is certain to draw major attention. Faubus left for the conference Friday, but Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. of Virginia said he would not be able to attend.

The Norfolk School Board — under federal court orders to admit 17 Negroes to its six all-white high schools — said if its appeal for a stay is granted, the schools will open on a segregated basis Sept. 29. If the stay is denied, the board said, it will have to assign the Negroes to white schools.

Under Virginia law, assigning Negroes to a white school forces the school to close.

A member of the Virginia General Assembly, John C. Webb of Fairfax County, said he has urged the governor to call a special session on the Assembly to repeal the school closure law. Webb, a Democrat, said the Supreme Court decision last week ordering Little Rock to integrate Central High School immediately makes it clear that a policy of massive resistance will destroy Virginia's public school system.

Calmness settled over the campus of the Louisiana State University branch college in New Orleans after three days of racial incidents. Dean Homer Hitt said all is quiet and "LSU is trying to maintain order."

Signs warning against racial disturbances replaced anti-Negro and Ku Klux Klan banners which previously had been secretly planted on the campus. The disorders—blamed on nonstudents by Hitt—cropped up after 59 Negroes were admitted to the previously all-white institution under court order.

A group of students at one of Little Rock's closed high schools Friday adopted a resolution saying they want to [illegible] to school, "even if [illegible] Negro students" are admitted.

About 65 [illegible] School students met at a church Friday afternoon.

Chris Barrier, 16, a Hall junior, said only two students voiced opposition to the resolution.

"It was just for Hall students," he said, "but a few from Central High showed up, too."

The statement read:

"We fear that our education may be impaired or unduly delayed by keeping Hall High school closed and we feel it is up to our best interest and to the best interest of the community that our school be reopened immediately as a public school even if, upon reopening, qualified Negro students of Hall High district may be assigned to classes in our school."

Young Barrier said copies will be mailed to Gov. Orval E. Faubus, Little Rock city officials and the school board.

Diane Russell, 15, a sophomore, said the feeling among students is that all want to return to school, regardless of integration.

SET STAGE FOR TV CLASSES IN LITTLE ROCK—Preparations were underway at Little Rock Friday to bring school classes via television to many high school students whose schools are closed by order of Gov. Orval E. Faubus. Announcer Bill Leer holds microphone for Mrs. Margaret Metcalf, a literature teacher at Hall High. At right, Mrs. Elizabeth Huckaby, vice principal at Central High, waits her turn at the microphone. The group was busy on a run-through of an introduction to the classes, which begin Monday.

DEFENDERS SEEK TO CLOSE TWO SCHOOLS

'Defenders' seek to close 2 Va. schools

Baltimore, Md.

ARLINGTON, Va. — Two white mothers filed application to enter their children in colored schools here. The parents are members of the pro-segregation organization, the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties.

They were accompanied by Jack Rathbone, head of the organization, who admitted the action is a "retaliatory measure" to the 26 colored applicants to white schools. He call the action "tit for tat."

Any school that is racially mixed in Virginia will be automatically closed. The two applications are to Langston Elementary and Hoffman-Boston Junior High Schools.

ONE OF THE mothers, Mrs. Marion Gatterman, said she wanted her son, Ronald, 7, to enter the colored school because it is closer to her home than the nearest white school. The boy has not attended school in Arlington before.

Applications were made on public placement forms which will be sent to Richmond for processing. The forms provide no space for the listing of preferred schools but the mothers wrote in the names of the colored schools.

Virginia's Warren County Opens 1st Private Classes

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 16 (AP)—About 100 Warren County High School seniors gathered quietly in a textile workers union hall at Front Royal today and met six private teachers. Then they moved on to a youth center for classes.

It was the first classroom work since their high school closed nearly five weeks ago under Virginia's anti-integration laws. No classes have been organized for nearly 900 students in the other grades.

"This is serious business," the seniors were told by Percy Rogers, educational director of the Warren County Educational Foundation.

Thus make-shift schooling began in Warren County, the first in Virginia to have a school closed. Private classes have been conducted in private homes in Charlottesville for several weeks, and about half the 10,000 pupils out of school in Norfolk are believed to be receiving some kind of tutoring.

Meanwhile, Gov. J. Lindsay Almond remained behind his closed office door, seeing few visitors. His semiweekly press conference, scheduled for today, was canceled for the fifth time in a row. The last one was held Sept. 30.

Persons close to the governor asked reporters if they could explain the apparent public apathy to nine closed schools and 12,700 pupils without normal public education.

If there is any public demand for a change of policy, it is not evident. The governor's office said mail volume is falling off, but it continues to be very heavily behind the governor's unyielding stand for massive resistance.

Private Classes Start at Front Royal, Va.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 16 (AP)—Private classes for seniors from the integration-closed Warren County High School opened at Union Hall in Front Royal Thursday.

Duncan C. Gibb, chairman of the Warren County Educational Foundation, said he did not know how many pupils would show up, but there was a potential of 120. He said there are sufficient teachers to take care of all who attend and that the pupils have their own books.

The private school operation here had been scheduled to open last Thursday, but a decision from Federal District Judge John Paul resulted in a week's postponement.

Paul ruled that private schools set up in areas where public schools were closed by integration orders cannot use publicly paid teachers unless the private schools are desegregated.

Substitute Teachers Used

The Front Royal group announced plans to use substitute teachers and other qualified teachers who are not on the public payroll.

A part of the money to operate the schools was assured last night when members of Local 371, Textile Workers Union of America, voted for a $1 per week assessment per member to help finance the schools.

The local represents some 2,000 workers at the Front Royal plant of the American Viscose Company. The vote was 235 to 49. Sixteen Negro members opposed the assessment. A union spokesman said union members unwilling to pay would not be assessed.

At Charlottesville, where Lane High School and Venable Elementary schools are closed, private classes continued with public-school teachers. City Attorney John S. Battle, Jr., said the public-school teachers could be used until one of the private schools refused to admit a Negro.

School Closed In Virginia As Last Resort

FRONT ROYAL, Va. (UPI)—Warren County High School will send its 1,048 students home from classes today with instructions not to return until an integration crisis is over.

The school board indefinitely suspended all classes in the county's only high school in a nine-hour meeting Thursday night.

School Supt. Q. D. Gasque said he had no idea how long the school would stay closed. "I can't see anything beyond Monday," he said.

By Monday, the board believes the school will have fallen victim to Virginia's last-resort segregation law that automatically shuts down integrated schools. That law apparently will keep it closed until Virginia's integration crisis, somehow, is resolved.

Beyond that, Gasque said, "I wish I knew what the solution is."

It is the first time in the South that a public school has been ordered closed because of desegregation.

Judge orders Negroes into 'private' schools

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Federal Judge John Paul said today makeshift private school programs in Charlottesville and Warren County, Va., must admit Negroes or stop using public school teachers.

An order to this effect will be entered effective one week from today, the judge told counsel in U. S. District Court in Harrisonburg after a lengthy private conference.

Charlottesville has provided private class facilities for nearly all of the 1700 pupils displaced by closure of Lane High School and Venable Elementary School, which were ordered integrated.

WARREN COUNTY expected to start tomorrow on a similar private school program. Its high school was the first to be closed after Paul ordered the admission of 22 Negroes for which the county provided no high school facilities.

School Board Atty. John S. Battle Jr., of Charlottesville, asked the court for a week's delay before making the order effective to give the city a chance to see if it could find other teachers and thus not scrap the private system.

Paul noted that the defendant school boards had asked for a chance to present testimony on the private school plan.

Paul said he did not wish to deny them this opportunity. "But," he added, "in the meantime the court is not willing to let them operate on the present basis."

Paul said he took this view since the greater part of the expense of the operation was in teacher salaries which came from public funds.

"To allow that to continue would be a clear violation of the mandate of the Supreme Court," he said.

Paul said earlier he could not order the reopening of the closed schools. He called the private school programs "too obviously an evasion" of the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation mandate.

In Norfolk, where 10,000 students are idled by six closed schools, a hearing is set in Federal District Court Friday on a motion similar to the one heard by Paul today.

Paul told attorneys he would not rule on the constitutionality of the state law under which the schools were closed since a test of the law was being made in the State Supreme Court.

MEANWHILE, a nation-wide test of sentiment—at the pocketbook level—on private schools as a means of preserving segregation was in the making today.

Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus announced that he and Dr. T. J. Raney, president of a corporation seeking to establish all-white private high schools in Little Rock, will send out thousands of letters appealing for funds.

The letters, written on the governor's stationery, will go to people all over the nation who have written or telegraphed commendation of his stand.

They will promise a prorata refund of any unused contributions should the state, now enjoined by federal court decree, be able later to provide money for the shools.

IN THE MEANTIME, four Anderson County, Tenn., school officials flew to Washington to take directly to the White House problems arising from the devastating bombing of their integrated Clinton High School.

They had an afternoon engagement with Presidential Assistants Rocco Siciliano and Ed McCabe to discuss, among other things, who is liable in the case of destructive acts?

IN WASHINGTON, White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said he knew of no plans for the president to see the Tennessee delegation.

He said that after the group has talked with Special Assistants Rocco Siciliano and Ed McCabe, "we will see where the discussion goes from there."

REPRESENTING RACIALLY-TROUBLED Anderson County are Frank Wilson, acting county attorney; R. C. Crossno and O. C. Mays, school board members, and County Judge J. D. Yarnell.

On a more peaceable front, a Newport News minister, the Rev. John F. Williams, says Gov. J. Lindsay Almond of Virginia has promised consideration of a proposal by Williams for a biracial conference to restore "the torn-down communication lines between the races."

In Little Rock, Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas accused the federal government of trying to penalize him for his fight for state's rights. He cited extra personal tax demands and "pressure in other ways." The Internal Revenue Service in Little Rock said it had erred in preparing a tax claim against Faubus, and claimed the head office in Washington knew nothing of it.

FAUBUS' LETTER states: "It appears necessary that the Little Rock Private School Corp. should proceed with its plan to set up private schools in private facilities, to be operated by private funds. It is urgent that students re-enter school at the earliest possible date. We would therefore appreciate your assistance in providing contributions to sustain the private schools at this time."

Faubus, who closed schools ordered to integrate, said he expects the Little Rock Private School Corp. to open private segregated school about Oct. 15.

16 of 30 Negroes Show Up for Test In Norfolk Pupil Placement Plan

Washington Post
Washington, D.C.

NORFOLK, Va., July 29 (AP). Sixteen of 30 Negro pupils seeking admission to three white high schools here in September reported today to take placement tests required by the School Board.

Among the 14 who stayed away these were presumed to be a number of students whose parents are plaintiffs in a suit entered at Federal District Court here Monday asking the School Board's placement procedures be declared invalid.

The appearance of the pupils for the exams assured a practical as well as a legal test of the Board's assignment plan.

Wed 7-30-58

In the group were pupils who wish to enter Norview, Granby and Maury High Schools, extending the threat of closing to all of the city's white high schools. Failure to report for the tests, the school superintendent warned, means that no application will get further consideration from the interview committee which is to make its report to the School Board before Aug. 8.

In the group who showed up for the Norfolk tests were pupils who wish to enter Norview, Granby and Maury High schools. School officials warned that one's failure to report for the tests means that his application will get no further consideration from the interviewing committee which reports to the school board Aug. 8.

The Norfolk pupils who took the tests were rising juniors and seniors at Booker T. Washington High school.

Tuesday was the final day in Charlottesville for interviews under the school assignment program adopted by the school board in June. The Negro applicants boycotted achievement tests last week and none showed up Monday for the first of the two-day scheduled interviews.

Oliver W. Hill, attorney who represents 26 of the 32, said last week the applicants would refuse to cooperate with the assignment program. He filed a motion in U. S. district court in Harrisonburg asking federal Judge John Paul to declare the Charlottesville plan invalid.

"unreasonable and unnecessary" and that they are discriminatory because all pupils would not be required to take them. The Negro attorney said he already had advised the 15 parents he represents to boycott the tests.

The tests are part of a comprehensive plan formulated by the school board July 17 for assignment of Negro and white pupils to city schools this autumn.

The plan sets forth 10 criteria by which applications for transfer from one school to another will be judged. The tests would be given to children of either race who apply for transfer to schools for the opposite race.

The "standards and criteria" include academic achievement, health an dsafety of the children, place of residence, physical and moral fitness, social adaptability, emotional adjustment and cultural background. Students applying for such transfers, as well as their parents, would be interviewed by a committee of the school board.

All told, 151 Negro pupils thus far have applied for admission to nine white schools this fall in Norfolk, which is under a Federal Court order to begin desegregation with the start of the next school term.

As to why the children did not show up for the tests, Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, NAACP attorney, said:

The Charlottesville program, as designed by Battle recently, is devised to keep as many as possible of the city's school's open, yet segregated in compliance with state law and in defiance of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Asked whether he thought colored children would make lower grades than whites, he said that he would not be surprised if the tests showed the colored children to be below the whites in achievement.

If the colored pupils did make lower marks on the tests, Mr. White said it would be because colored schools don't have "equal facilities."

QUESTIONED as to whether the colored children in Norfolk would take similar tests scheduled for next week, Mr. Hill said he wasn't able to answer at this time.

"I couldn't tell you whether the children will take the tests without knowing what the plan involves. I haven't seen the Norfolk plan, and I'm not in a position to say what will be done."

Some 137 pupils are scheduled to take the tests in the Tidewater City.

The notices of date of test are being delivered to the parents of children involved by C. N. Opalenik, superintendent of custodians. Signatures of re[illegible] are being required.

Mixing Order Closes School In Virginia

Only High School In Warren County Shuts Doors Today

BY BILL JOHNSON

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Warren County's only high school closes at the end of classes today as the direct result of a federal court order that the white school admit 22 Negroes.

The county school board announced the "temporary suspension" of the school at Front Royal yesterday. The board said the Negroes would be enrolled Saturday and Monday. Under Virginia law, the assignment or enrollment of any Negro pupil in a white school automatically closes that school.

The school officials came to Richmond to talk over their problem with Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. and state legal aides.

It was not known what action might come from the meeting.

At a news conference, Almond hinted — without further explanation—the state may have yet another plan that could keep schools from either being integrated or closed this year.

Supt. Q. D. Gasque said he did not know how long the school at Front Royal would be suspended but he expected a formal closing order from the state by Monday.

The school board has not considered or discussed the possibility of asking Almond to allow the school to operate on an integrated basis without state funds, he said. He knew of no plans anywhere in the county to establish a private school system for the pupils involved.

When a school is closed under Virginia's massive resistance to integration laws, its control passes to the governor. He is obligated to try to reorganize and reopen it on a segregated basis.

The governor apparently would be able to transfer the white pupils to other schools, eliminate any grades in the school which are integrated or attempt to transfer the Negro pupils to Negro schools.

Should he fail to reopen the school on a segregated basis, he may, if asked by both the county school board and County Board of Supervisors, return the school to the county to be operated on an integrated basis.

Once an integrated school is opened, all state funds go to that school and to all schools of its class—elementary or secondary—are immediately cut off.

Gasque has said previously the county does not have enough money to operate its schools by itself.

At Charlottesville, meanwhile, city school officials postponed the opening of the white Lane High School and Venable Elementary School from Monday until Sept. 22.

Both schools are under federal court orders to admit Negroes—two to Lane and 10 to Venable.

The two Negroes ordered admitted to Lane said they would enroll when it opens.

Federal Dist. Judge John Paul ordered the Negroes admitted to the Warren County school last Monday. He said a governing factor was that the county did not operate a Negro high school but sent Negro pupils to neighboring counties.

Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals refused to grant a stay of Paul's order.

Showdown On School Integration In Virginia May Be Forthcoming Soon

By LON K. SAVAGE

RICHMOND, Va. — (UPI) — There has been so much confusion about what's likely to happen when schools open in Virginia next month, it might be worth while to look into the situation.

It's serious, all right. It threatens to close several schools and possibly several school systems. It almost certainly will bring the state government into fresh conflict with the federal government. There is the potential here for another Little Rock, although forces on all sides seem to be working feverishly behind the scenes to prevent that.

The Show Down

What's happened is that Arlington County — in Washington's front yard — and the cities of Norfolk and Charlottesville have been ordered to desegregate schools when classes open in September. They have exhausted appeals from those orders.

But under Virginia law, if any white school accepts Negroes, it would be closed under one of the state's "massive resistance" laws. On the other side is the kind of Federal court order that led to the army being sent to Little Rock last fall.

"I don't know what will happen," said Norfolk Superintendent J. J. Brewbaker. "I don't know even what our position is. The Federal courts say you got to admit these kids in school. The state says we can't. So where are we?"

Suppose one of the integration ordered cities should agree to abide by the orders?

Talks About Classes

Under Gov. Lindsay Almond's "massive resistance" plan, he would assume control of the affected school district, reorganize it and reopen it on a segregated basis. He is talking now in terms of taking up the matter by individual integrated classes, however, rather than entire schools or districts.

If the state failed to get by with the re-opening plan, the school then would be closed. Pupils would be sent to some kind of private school. If only a few pupils were involved, they would be absorbed into other schools and for the time at least, that would be the end of it.

At that point, however, parents of the Negro litigants are expected to ask the courts again to order the affected school re-opened on an integrated basis. That's where the state of Virginia and the government would be at a "Little Rock" crossroads.

One of the big question marks in the whole Virginia situation is whether private schools would work. Even the highest state authorities are doubtful. If a considerable number of public schools were closed, there simply wouldn't be enough facilities and teachers to meet the emergency.

Out of the confused puzzle, this is about the best way anyone can put it together at the moment:

Question of Numbers

The chances are that only a few schools actually will be closed in September. The students from them probably could be absorbed into other schools. Before further crisis, Almond could call a special session of the general assembly to re-write his strict laws, at least to the extent of preventing the mass closing of schools.

Norfolk might be the spot where actual integration would first be tested. The school board there has said it will comply with the Federal court order and that it could not "guarantee" complete segregation.

Although Arlington has been ordered to admit Negroes who have been named — as they were in Little Rock—to presently-all white schools, the pupils will be assigned under the state public placement act. It is expected the Negroes will be assigned to Negro schools although this would be in direct contradiction of the court order.

Charlottesville may attempt to get by with a new school district plan that would put all Negro pupils in one district.

Norfolk and Charlottesville have their own pupil placement plans under which Negro applicants will have to pass stiff entry requirements. Negroes have challenged the validity of both assignment plans but they have so far been upheld by the courts. A new test of the Norfolk plan is due in Federal court this week.

Almond has described the Virginia case as the gravest crisis since the Civil War.

Gov. Almond Says Integration Order Will Prevent Opening Of Va. Schools

Richmond, Va. (NNPA) — A final court order directing the admission of a colored student to a white school will prevent the opening of that school under Virginia's "massive resistance" laws aimed at keeping the public schools segregated, Gov. J. Lindsay Almond said recently.

He declined to say, however, whether Arlington County or any other school district where Federal courts have ordered integration have reached this point.

Seven colored students have been ordered admitted to four white Arlington schools in a decree that the United States Supreme Court upheld last May.

Gov. Almond's statement Tuesday marked the first time he ha acknowledged that a Federal court order for the admission of a colored student constitutes enrollment of the student in a specific school, bringing into effect Virginia's school-closing law.

Previously, Gov. Almond has gone only so far as to say that enrollment of a colored student would bring the closing of a school.

The question about the effects of a specific Federal court order was asked Gov. Almond at a press conference. He replied:

"A final and unappealable order of a Federal court of competent jurisdiction ordering the enrollment of a given child to a named school constitutes an enrollment under Virginia laws.

"If that persists, the school involved is integrated and will not open."

In declining to comment on the present status of Arlington County schools, Gov. Almond said it was not possible to say what a court might do in light of changed conditions.

Of the seven colored students ordered admitted to white schools, one definitely intends to attend, four others have declined to say what they will do, one has graduated, and the other has gone to school outside the county.

In cases involving the public schools in Charlottesville and Norfolk, general desegregation orders from Federal lourts have been upheld by the Supreme Court.

School boards in Norfolk and Charlottesville have set up a special screening program and assignment plan for colored applicants for transfer to white schools.

In Charlottesville, the colored applicants have refused to take the tests and are challenging them in Federal court. In Norfolk a similar challenge will be made on August 18.

The school board in Newport News hopes to escape a desegregation showdown in September because of the city's recent consolidation with Warwick.

New School Groups Bow To Court

Private Classes To Admit Negroes In Charlottesville

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

Two of Charlottesville's three interim schooling groups apparently will switch operations to a desegregated basis so they can continue using public school teachers.

Sentiment in the Joint High School Committee and the Parents Committee for Emergency Schooling yesterday supported the move to comply with an order by Federal District Judge John Paul.

The segregationist Charlottsville Educational Foundation, the third group, probably will decide to abandon the use of public school teachers and pay for private teachers from tuition and donations, however.

Statements confirming the policies are expected from the three groups today.

In Norfolk yesterday, the NAACP withdrew its motion to force the School Board to reopen State-closed schools and contemplated action against Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, instead, as suggested by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman.

The Norfolk School Board enrolled 17 Negroes in six white secondary schools to comply with Judge Hoffman's desegration order. Judge Paul ordered 12 Negroes into two Charlottesville schools and 22 Negroes into Warren County High School in Front Royal.

All the schools were closed and 13,000 white students locked out by a State "massive resistance" law. Private school groups were formed in Charlottesville and Warren County to provide stop-gap education by using idle school teachers

On Wednesday, Judge Paul ruled that the school boards of Charlottesville and Warren County must not let public school teachers aid the stop-gap schooling unless such schooling was desegrated. He gave the boards until next Wednesday to comply.

The interim school leaders in Charlittesville received assurance from the Governor's office that he would not interfere with the classes if they are desegrated.

Feared Almond

They had feared the Governor might consider the interim desegregated schools, by using public teachers, to be public schools—and invoke the state's school closing law on them. But the Governor is reported to have said he will not.

The Parents Committee for Emergency Schooling is providing classes for 385 Venable Elementary School pupils. The Charlottesville Educational Foundation is providing schooling for 135 Venable pupils.

Both organizations formed the Joint High School Committee to provide temporary classes for pupils of closed Lane High School.

From their policy-forming sessions yesterday, it appeared the Joint High School Committee and the Parents Committee for Emergency Schooling would hold on to their public teachers by desegregatting. But it was likely the two groups would also announce a districting plan designed to minimize or even prevent desegregation.

The Charlottesville Educational Foundation, more segregation-minded than the other two, apparently decided to forego use of public teachers and maintain segregation.

In Norfolk, the NAACP failed to get relief from Judge Hoffman who said it would be a "waste of time" to order the School Board to reopen the schools because the Board, under State law, has no control over them.

Oliver W. Hill, NAACP attorney, contended the School Board did have control of the schools because the school closing law was "patently unconstitutional."

Hoffman suggested that Hill ask for a three-judge Federal court to rule on the law's validity.

Hill replied that was a time-consuming procedure, and the three-judge court might wait until after the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals had ruled on the law which is being contested by the State itself.

"If a three-judge court might wait, why shouldn't a lone district judge, who catches it from right and left, wait?" asked Hoffman.

"Because 10,000 children are being denied schools," said Hill.

Irreparable Damage

"You don't have to argue with me that there is irreparable damage to the city of Norfolk," said Hoffman. "But I think you want me to get at this through the back door, and I think you should use the front door . . ."

"Isn't the orderly procedure to bring a suit against the Governor if he is carrying out an unconstitutional act? . . .

"You are asking what would be tantamount to an injunction against the Governor who is not a party to the suit. It is an admirable suggestion, but I question whether it can be done."

Hill argued that the schools were closed by State law and not the Governor.

"There must be someone in the State of Virginia on whom responsibility for the administration of the law rests," said Hoffman, "whether it be the Governor or the Attorney General.

"Of course, you can't miss by inviting them both in."

Hill then withdrew his motion and told reporters later that NAACP attorneys will now consider whether to initiate action against the Governor.

VIRGINIA

CHARLOTTESVILLE

'There'll be no trouble'

By RUFUS WELLS
AFRO Staff Correspondent

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — "If the outside agitators stay away, I doubt if there will be any trouble when schools open."

George R. Ferguson, president of the Charlottesville Branch NAACP, settled back in an easy chair in his comfortable home here as he told the AFRO of the local situation as desegregation day approached.

OUTSIDE, COLORED and white tots, who live side by side, played together on the sidewalk, blissfully, unaware of the raging school controversy.

Ferguson, a leading mortician here, has spearheaded the movement to integrate schools. He has set the pace by seeking to have his daughter admitted to Lane High School.

Under his leadership, the local NAACP has placed emphasis on preparing children and grownups for the inevitable day when the two races will study and live together in an integrated community.

SUPPORTED BY community organizations, the NAACP approaches "this new experience with calmness, friendliness, self-respect and respect for others."

A typical college town, Charlottesville is the home of the University of Virginia, which is integrated at the undergraduate and graduate levels.

Mr. Ferguson is confident that the local school board will comply with the Federal court order to desegregate its schools, despite the board's recent redistricting program which was designed to hold integration to a minimum.

"THERE'S A of talk about the lack of communication between white and colored residents; about lines of communication being broken as a result of the school issue. But when I boiled it down, I never have seen any real communication between the two groups here," he said.

Mr. Ferguson said he thinks there will be more "communication" as the South moves away from its bi-racial society.

A dapper, bespectacled man who resembles the typical successful American businessman, Mr. Ferguson readily admits that school desegregation presents serious problems to both races. He also believes that these problems can be solved.

"THE SCHOOL board is right up against the wall," he said.

Also expressing optimism was Ray Bell, local mortician, and Boston University graduate, who is press and publicity chairman.

Mr. Bell, whose job will include working with scores of newsmen who will descend on the city next week, said there is every reason to believe that the colored pupils seeking admission to white schools would be assigned.

"MOST WHITE people here are more intelligent, more cosmopolitan and have more education than those in other areas of the state. They are not as violently opposed to integration as whites in isolated rural areas might be," he explained.

NAACP officials have conferred with the chief of police here and were assured that law and order would be maintained.

Race relations in Charlottesville are considered good and the interracial tension prevalent in Prince Edward County is not evidenced here.

Two Charlottesville Groups Seek Accord on Schooling

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Sept. 23.—Representatives of two parent groups met here today to try to work together in providing makeshift classroom space for more than 1,000 students locked out of Lane High School.

3. Teachers of Lane High School asked the two groups to get together in providing temporary facilities for high school instruction.

4. The Governor refused to grant permission to the Committee for Public Education for a meeting at Lane High. The committee was organized to try to get the school reopened.

5. A membership meeting of the Committee for Public Education at the county courthouse tabled a motion which would have asked the Governor to let Charlottesville run its own schools.

6. Students of Lane High began circulating a petition asking the Governor to either reopen the high school or return it to local operation.

Two Groups Meet

Representatives of the Parents' Committee for Emergency Schooling and the Charlottesville Education Foundation met today at the National Bank with Lane Principal William I. Nickels and a group of teachers.

The 50 Lane teachers met

Supt. Fendall R. Ellis told teachers at both Venable and Lane yesterday that they could do whatever they choose while the schools are closed but they should be available for immediate recall when the schools are reopened.

The two schools were closed yesterday under the State's massive resistance program when 12 Negro students were ordered into the schools by Federal Judge John Paul. The city's other schools are operating.

One Would Dissolve

The principal difference between the two parent groups is that the Parents Committee for Emergency Schooling plans to dissolve when the public schools are reopened, but the Education Foundation plans to continue private segregated schooling if the schools are reopened on an integrated basis.

Mrs. Charles A. Via, jr., a director of the Parents Committee, said the two groups have been unable to get together on schooling for the elementary students and that 'each will go its separate way and do the best it can."

Education Foundation Chairman William M. Pope said teachers are available and that eight classes will start as soon as a vacant house can be equipped. He estimated this would take about two days.

The elementary students registered by the two groups represent nearly all of the Venable student body. Most of the remainder have transferred to private schools or are going to schools in nearby jurisdictions. The enrollment at Venable normally would have been about 640.

Registration Called Off

Fred Morton, who heads the high school division of the Parents Committee, said his group stands ready to agree to a program as proposed by the teachers. The Parents Committee was scheduled to begin registration today for high school students, but called it off pending the outcome of the joint conference.

However, the Education Foundation plans to go ahead with registration for high school seniors today at the Elks Club. Mr. Pope said he expects an agreement to be reached between the two groups on educating the high school students.

Classes are expected to begin for high school seniors tomorrow at the Elks Club Hall. Mr. Pope said classes for juniors probably will be started later in the week at the First Methodist Church, which gave approval last night to use of its building. A quonset hut used by a parochial school also has been made available, Mr Pope said, as well as a few other church facilities.

Meanwhile, members of the Committee for Public Education jammed the courtroom of the county courthouse last night to adopt a set of by-laws which call for pursuing "every legal means to keep public schools open."

Indignant Responses

An announcement by Chairman J. A. Rolston that Gov. Almond had refused permission to use the high school for a meeting drew indignant responses from about 200 attending.

A telegram from Gov. Almond said that "in view of existing circumstances, I believe it inadvisable for the high school building to be used for public gatherings at this time."

"The roads are still open," said one man who suggested that every member drive to Richmond to make a personal call on the Governor. Another suggested that everyone write a letter.

Ralph Cherry, dean of the School of Education at the University of Virginia and vice president of the Committee for Public Education, said the board of directors has thought of seeking an injunction against the Governor to prevent him from carrying out the State's massive resistance law. He said, however, that in the present climate of opinion in the State and because the cost of litigation, the board thought it best to follow a "cautious" policy for the present.

Resolution Tabled

The "cautious" attitude prevailed last night when the group tabled, by a 69 to 51 vote, a resolution by Thomas Hammond which said: "We believe local rights are just as important as State's rights and we feel that democracy demands that the people of Charlottesville have a right to run their own public schools."

The resolution asked for return of the two closed schools to the city and called for special session of the General Assembly to pass legislation "giving back to the locality the right to operate schools as they think best."

Mr. Cherry said the resolution represented the thinking of the group but that most members thought it would be more forceful if passed later when the membership has grown. The group now has about 500 members. The executive board plans an intensive drive and expects to hold a rally when it can locate a place big enough.

NEGROES SET TEST OF VIRGINIA LAWS

N.A.A.C.P. in First Move to Challenge Validity of Integration Bans

By LAWRENCE FELLOWS
Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 3—Attorneys for Negro children made their first move today to test the constitutionality of the state's "massive resistance" laws under which nine public schools in three communities have been closed.

Oliver W. Hill, who is chairman of the Legal Committee in Virginia for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, filed a motion in the Federal District Court in Harrisonburg today asking for "further relief" in effect, the authority of the Federal courts in ordering the admission of twenty-two Negro students to Warren County High School at Front Royal.

Late this afternoon, Mr. Hill mailed another motion, almost identical in wording, asking relief from the same court for twelve Negro pupils assigned to Venable Elementary School and Lane High School in Charlottesville.

Wednesday Hearings Asked

In both motions he asked Judge John Paul of that court to hear the matter at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning or as soon thereafter as possible.

Victor J. Ashe, who represents seventeen Negro pupils assigned to six white secondary schools in Norfolk, said that he would file "substantially the same motion" in Federal District Court there Monday morning.

He said that he would ask Judge Walter E. Hoffman to set an early date for a hearing.

In each motion, the Superintendent of Schools and the School Board are named defendants.

The Harrisonburg motion charges that they "have permitted teachers and other employes to teach groups of children who would normally attend the public schools at various places in the County of Warren under private auspices."

Private Plan Founders

This contention may be deleted from the motion that will be made in Norfolk, where efforts to set up make-shift private instruction foundered today for lack of teachers.

The Tidewater Educational Foundation, which enrolled 25 per cent of Norfolk's 10,000 displaced white pupils for private instruction, has put off its plans indefinitely because of the refusal of public school teachers to participate.

But school officials in Norfolk, like those in Warren County and Charlottesville, are expected to be charged with acting as intermediaries for the state, which the N. A. A. C. P. says "has embarked upon an unconstitutional course of conduct primarily designed to frustrate the orders and decisions of this court and the rights of these plaintiffs to secure non-segregated public education."

And the motions will contend that the school officials "are placing reliance upon legislative schemes, acts and provisions which are unconstitutional, null and void and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States." The Fourteenth Amendment prohibits states from abridging the rights of citizens.

Attorney General Albertis S. Harrison Jr. would not predict today how the three motions would be fought in court, but it was expected that the initial stand, at least, would be that the school officials had been wrongly named as defendants and that they are helpless to act because of state law.

In a speech prepared for delivery at a Democratic dinner tonight, Mr. Harrison said that "some of the laws designed to preserve our public school system may prove ineffective; if so, they will be replaced by other laws, openly enacted, and fairly administered."

NAACP Starts Virginia Battle

Attorneys Taking Action To Re-Open Schools

PRIVATE PLAN DELAYED

By United Press International

RICHMOND, Oct. 3.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Friday began its battle to force re-opening of Virginia's nine schools which have been closed to avoid integration.

NAACP Atty. Oliver W. Hill of Richmond filed a motion with United States District Judge John Paul of Harrisonburg requesting re-opening of Warren County High School in Front Royal.

Another NAACP lawyer, Victor J. Ashe of Norfolk, said he would file a motion Monday with United States District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk, asking that the port city's six white junior and senior high schools be reopened immediately on an integrated basis.

Similar Motion Considered

A similar motion to force the re-opening of Charlottesville's only white high school and one of its five white elementary schools was being considered.

The nine schools were closed by order of Gov. J. Lindsay Almond after Judges Hoffman and Paul ordered that they be integrated. A Virginia law automatically closes any racially-mixed schools but the Governor proclaims the action.

An emergency private education group announced Friday in Norfolk that because of a lack of teachers it was postponing indefinitely classes scheduled to begin Monday for about 2,500 Norfolk students displaced from integration-closed schools.

Other developments in the racial crisis:

Thurmond Asks Support

Senator Strom Thurmond (D., S. C.) called on the South to defy this week's Supreme Court integration ruling and operate schools "as we see fit."

He urged Southerners and "all others who support a government of laws" to give vigorous support to the people of Arkansas and Virginia who "are undergoing the brunt of a brutal persecution directed at the South."

In Wheelwright, Ky., Floyd County Superintendent of Schools O. V. Turner said Friday he had received no formal request that Wheelwright High School Principal Boone Hall resign and added that classes would resume as scheduled Monday. Classes at the 650-pupil high school were suspended Wednesday when a crowd threw stones at the building and broke several windows.

North Carolina's Atty. Gen. Malcolm Seawell warned the state Friday night that the day must never come when it will go out of the business of public education to avoid the law of the land.

NOVEMBER
(CLOSING) ?
NEGRO HIGH AND JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS
AFTER JANUARY 1, 1959

Norfolk Action Permits Negro School Closure

From News Dispatches

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 26 The Norfolk City Council has adopted a 1959 budget that would permit closing all Negro high and junior high schools any time after Jan. 1.

The provisions of the budget approved yesterday gave rise to the possibility that the port City, where 10,000 white high and junior high school students have been shut out of their schools by State racial laws, might close the Negro schools.

The move would be in an effort to get Negro parents to stop pushing desegregation attempts and to persuade the parents of 17 Negro children to withdraw from white schools where they were enrolled under Federal court orders.

Six of the Norfolk's seven white junior and senior high schools were closed Sept. 27. The closing took place immediately after the 17 students were enrolled and before they could enter classes.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond said last week he was opposed to closing of Negro schools because it would be interpreted as retaliation against the Negroes for trying to enter white schools.

Hints on Negro Schools

Governor Almond declined comment today when asked about Norfolk's move against Negroes. He indicated he did not want to become involved in the controversy.

A move to close the Negro schools has been discussed since Norfolk voters last Tuesday rejected by a 3-2 margin a proposal that the City seek the reopening of the six white schools on an integrated basis. Numerous hints have been dropped of the proposed closing of Negro schools.

Sources close to Norfolk's City administration say there has been growing pressure for closing down the Negro schools. And the proposal apparently was discussed Monday in a meeting of members of the Council and School Board. Some councilmen have indicated they believe Negro parents will realize the predicament of the whites if the Negro schools also are shut down.

Both white and Negro parents have attacked the constitutionality of the school-closing laws, and a special three-judge Federal court has heard testimony in one instance. The constitutionality of the laws also is before the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, which heard arguments Monday.

Would Affect 4500

Should the Norfolk City Council close the Negro schools, it would affect some 4500 pupils at Booker T. Washington High School and at Jacox and Ruffner Junior High Schools.

There was a possibility, too, the City's governing body would extend the closing operations to include the eighth grade in the all-white and still-operating Willard school.

In allocating $11.3 million for schools next year, the Council specifically reserved the right to "change or cancel the unexpended portion" of school funds at any time during the year, and to prohibit any expenditure it wishes.

The control clause on school funds says all the appropriations are tentative and adds:

"No part of the funds so appropriated shall, in any event, be available to the School Board except as the Council may, from time to time, by resolution authorize the payment or transfer of such funds, or any part thereof, to said School Board."

Norfolk Mayor W. Fred Duckworth told a reporter "You'll have to draw your own conclusions" about the removal of the purse strings from the school board.

School board chairman Paul Schweitzer said the board may issue a statement on City Council's school budget policy at its next regular meeting, Dec. 4.

Hopes It's Not True

The Rev. Richard B. Martin, rector of the Negro Grade Episcopal Church said he hoped it was not true that City's Council's action was meant to put Negro secondary schools in line for possible closing.

"I would feel that our great City Council with the authority it has would use its influence to ease tensions, rather than create them," he said.

But, said Martin, if the interpretation mentioned was correct, it was "shocking to me. I am indeed sorry to feel the council is acting in a punitive and retaliatory manner." He said such a step would only make matters worse.

Meanwhile a check showed no plans are afoot for governing bodies in Charlottesville and Warren County, where three white public schools have been closed to avoid desegregation, to take over control of spending for schools as Norfolk has done.

In other Virginia school desegregation developments today:

• Delegates to the convention of the Virginia Farm Bureau Federation voted their "continued wholehearted support" of the State's massive resistance school program. The Federation represents nearly 20,000 farm families.

• The Norfolk school board chairman announced that public schools can no longer be used for community group meetings to discuss the integration problem.

• In Richmond Governor Almond conferred with top state officials, presumably on a Norfolk school board claim for an additional $462,708 in state funds to pay for the upkeep of the six closed schools.

WEST VIRGINIA SCHOOL BOMBED

Integrated Building Is Heavily Damaged

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP)—An expertly rigged dynamite bomb exploded with shattering force early Monday inside a schoolhouse where whites and Negroes began attending classes together without incident three years ago.

Following school bombings in the South attributed to segregationists, the predawn blast aroused speculation in this northern West Virginia coal region that perhaps this, too, was the handiwork of racial extremists.

But school and local law enforcement officials said no evidence was found to link the bombing with racial conflict. They added the history of integration in the area since 1955 has been without incident.

FBI AT SCENE

About 20 FBI men, including demolition and fingerprint experts from Washington, swarmed to the scene in Osage, a recently incorporated city of some 400 persons four miles northwest of Morgantown. An estimated 25 to 30 per cent of the population is Negro.

The thunderous explosion, followed by a shock wave, routed fearful residents from their beds at 2:10 a.m.

It tore out a section of one wall on the ground floor of the two-story brick building and buckled a reinforced concrete ceiling supporting the second floor.

Windows and doors in the 17-room school were smashed. Desks, books, papers and cabinets were hurled into jumbled heaps. Splintered glass and wood and chuks of plaster were strewn everywhere.

LONG ELECTRIC WIRE

Charles A. Stevenson, superintendent of Monongalia County schools, said the building may have to be replaced. He added that a new school would cost $500,000 or more.

Sheriff Charles Whiston said two big charges of dynamite were placed in the main hallway on the first floor and detonated by means of a long electric wire stretching from a driveway through a gymnasium window.

The school had 240 pupils, including about 50 Negroes, in the first three elementary grades and the seventh, eighth and ninth grades. Another 120 pupils, including some 40 Negroes, attended classes for the fourth, fifth and sixth grades in the old Osage Negro school.

PROFESSIONAL JOB

An FBI agent said: "It looks like a professional job. From what we know now it looks like someone outside the community did it."

That was the general feeling in Osage. Miss Margaret Marshall, active in Methodist Church social work, told a newsman: "I just can't believe that anyone here could do such a thing. We feel it must have been an outsider."

OSAGE, W. VA.
DYNAMITED

Dynamite Shatters Integrated School

OSAGE, W. Va., Nov. 10 (UPI). A case of dynamite, expertly detonated, today wrecked the 17-room Osage Elementary-Junior High School, for five years a model of peaceful integration.

The bombing shocked this mining community, whose Negro and white residents have lived in racial peace since the rich coal seams of the area were opened more than 50 years ago. They had welcomed the end of segregated schools here in 1954.

The blast ripped through the main hallway of the 2½-story brick building at 2:15 a.m., damaging the structure beyond repair and jarring the homes of the town's 350 residents, 40 per cent of whom are Negro.

FBI Agents Investigate

Before dawn, FBI agents arrived to aid state police and Monongalia County Sheriff Charles J. Whiston in the investigation. But hours later, no suspects had been taken into custody and even the motive for the dynamiting was not clear.

Sheriff Whiston said two charges of dynamite had been detonated simultaneously at two points in the main first floor corridor. Investigators found a 300-foot length of wire leading through a gymnasium window to a driveway behind the building.

School authorities closed both the blasted building, which served 398 pupils, including 93 Negroes, and another elementary school 300 yards away. They hoped to get the students back to classes by Wednesday by doubling up in the undamaged building and farming pupils out to neighboring schools, such as those of the county seat of Morgantown, about three miles away.

Schools of Monongalia County have been desegregated since the U.S. Supreme Court's integration decision of 1954. There has been no racial conflict here.

No Difficulties

"This is the last thing we could expect," School Supt. Charles Stevenson declared. "We never had any difficulty."

Residents of the community were indignant. They blamed "outsiders" for the dynamiting, which buckled the walls of the building, shattered the windows and brought plaster crashing down on splintered desks.

Victor Shine, a coal miner who has worked side-by-side with Negroes in the mine-honeycombed hills of the district, declared flatly:

"Outsiders from the South are to blame."

Since the start of integration, northern West Virginia had been free from the violence which hit some cities in the south. Anonymous threats of bombings were rampant in Miami, Fla. during the weekend but the blast here came without warning.

"The whites and Negroes live together here side by side in peace," declared John Marshall, Methodist board of missions social worker who operates the Scott's Run Settlement House across the street from the blasted school. "I'll never believe it was anybody locally. It must have been outside interests."

ALABAMA STATE TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

ASTA Diamond Jubilee

World P.6 Birm Ala.

This week-end at Montgomery, Alabama the seventy-five year old Alabama State Teachers Association is having its "Diamond Jubilee Celebration." A calendar of activities is set for three days. A number of Alabama-born contemporary Negro persons who have achieved in a substantial, unusual and nationally-recognized way are coming back to their native Alabama to exhibit themselves, to witness the "Pageant of Progress" and to participate in this remarkable program.

Wed 3-26-58

Meantime, the ASTA has announced the publication of a booklet which will put into written form the names, achievements and biographies many of those Negro persons of Alabama birth or of Alabama adoption who have made distinguished contributions. Yet a step much further than this is needed. An effort needs to be made to improve the library and research facilities of our colleges and to bring in outstanding scholars.

The ASTA delegates must of necessity be concerned with much more at this convention than the listing of glitter biography of the past and glossy names of the present. It needs, we think, to concern itself with a basic, dynamic, vitalized program in line with a modern, up-to-date, and progressive association which will work boldly, fruitfully and unswervingly to advance the teaching profession forward, improve the lot of Negro teachers and to remove all barriers which prevent teaching and schools from having their singleness to which law, morality and the American credo entitle them.

The delegates, we think, should realize that a program of meanful services will cost them money. Neither progress nor pie comes without cost. Those who want progress will have to pay for it just like those who want pie will have to pay for it Nothing could be more evidential that the Negro teachers in Alabama mean business than a 100 per cent payment of membership dues. Teachers will have to put the money on the line to help make their organization first-class and their profession felt.

The ASTA, we think, should also concern itself with a broadened program of voter-registration and community leadership. It has most of the highly trained leaders of the Negro group within its membership in Alabama. The "Diamond Jubilee Celebration" could mark the beginning of a brighter day for all Alabama should the ASTA leadership build a program of effective services.

We are glad to congratulate the Alabama State Teachers Association upon its seventy-fifth anniversary. May the ASTA grow stronger and stronger, and in growing serving the needs of an Alabama which is moving toward what America means and stands for.

ASTA Appoints Jones Secretary

George W. Jones has been appointed as a full-time salaried executive secretary of the Alabama State Teachers Association.

The ASTA Executive Committee, in making the announcement, stated that the appointment fulfills one of the major objectives of the expanded program of the association and complies with the action of the delegate assembly during the last ASTA convention.

GEORGE W. JONES

Mr. Jones was born in Camden, South Carolina where he received his elementary and secondary school training. He received the A. B. degree from Benedict College, Columbia, South Carolina and the Master of Arts Degree in Sociology from the University of Chicago. He had been employed at Alabama State College since 1951 as Dean of the Sophomore College.

In accepting the position Mr. Jones stated, "I do not all all assume that the duties and obligations of the office of Executive Secretary can be taken lightly. Rather, I feel that it is a demanding and challenging position in these times. I will strive to execute the duties of the office beneficially and satisfactorily to all concerned and espicially to the best interest of the members of the Alabama State Teachers Association."

The formal announcement of Mr. Jone's appointment was made by the ASTA president at the recently successful Fall Workshop held in Montgomery with the immediate past Executive Secretary, Dr. J. Garrick Hardy, serving as coordinator.

ASTA's 39th President

Over a stretch of seventy-five years the Alabama State Teachers Association has elected a number of fine educators to head up its leadership. At its Diamond Jubilee Celebration held at Montgomery, Alabama, Mrs. Bessie Sears Estell, of this city was elected president without any candidate opposing her. She becomes the ASTA's thirty-ninth president and the third woman to assume this highest position in the association.

Mrs. Estell comes to the helm of leadership in this teacher professional organization at a time of deep changes, agonizing re-adjustments and absorbing idealism. More demands are being made on democracy to live up to its golden goals. Through rugged experience, a broad sense of understanding, a knowledge of the social scenery, and in identification with those lofty longings, she brings to her office the required qualifications needed at this time, we believe.

Yet the road ahead will not be easy no matter what leader ship qualities one has. Easy-chair leadership has seldom befitted those seeking meanful progress and substantial service. The ASTA is committed to a proposed program of new service which includes a full-time paid executive secretary. It needs to improve its vote commission and formulate an action program of teacher welfare. We hope that Mrs. Estell will work for the basic ASTA program no matter how many toes might be stepped on and how many petty interests have to be disturbed. Petty interests must not be allowed to stand in the way of dynamic progress.

Congratulations to Mrs. Estell for her election to this high office. The ASTA membership has made an excellent choice in placing her in command. But she will need support, cooperation, and the prayers of those who would like to have a well-functioning organization. Teamwork will be needed of the ASTA staff and the elected officers together with local and district support. No organization is stronger than the support the leaders get from it.

Mrs. Estell New Head Of Alabama State Teachers

MONTGOMERY, Ala. - (SNS) - Mrs. Bessie S. Estell, of Birmingham, running unopposed, was elected president of the Alabama State Teachers Association at the delegate assembly of the 75th annual session here Friday afternoon, March 28.

She becomes the 39th president of the ASTA and the third woman to head this association of more than 18,000 members. Mrs. Estell had been serving as acting president, assuming the office when Vernon McDaniel resigned the post to become executive secretary of the Teachers State Association of Texas with headquarters in Austin Texas.

In a hotly contested three-way race, Waymon R. F. Grant of Mobile was elected vice-president. He was opposed by A. G. Adams of Andalusia and the Rev. C. A. Fredd of Greensboro.

C. Leon Sheffield, of Decatur, unopposed, was elected treasurer; Charles Williams Thomas of Montgomery, unopposed, was elected as member of the executive committee and the Rev. Richard A. Sterling of Sheffield, was elected as trustee.

Dr. H. Councill Trenholm was renamed research secretary and Dr. John Garrick Hardy was continued as non-salaried executive secretary.

The delegate assembly rejected a series of proposed amendments to the constitution and referred a proposed $42,000 budget to the executive committee with instructions for alterations.

One influential convention member interpreted the referral budget action as a defeat for prospects of employing a full-time executive secretary.

The Tip Off

By EMORY O. JACKSON

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(SNS)— The Alabama Education Association is only one year older than the Alabama State Teachers Association. And the ASTA is the oldest association among Negro teachers.

How, then, do you account for the fact that some of the younger Negro teacher associations, and even the AEA, seem to be so far ahead of the ASTA?

In Georgia, where the Negro teachers association has an executive secretary, it moves its convention from city to city, and the entertainment is on the host city. Many convention services are given to the AEA when it meets in Birmingham. And had it been meeting in Montgomery the Coliseum and its parking services most likely would not have been expenses chargeable to the association.

Read of the activities of the AEA convention, the subjects discussed, the legislation advocated, the caliber of speakers, and the attention paid to it by politicians, and others, and you begin to ask questions.

The ASTA needs to grow up, to come of age, and to move out into the field of activities required of a modern association. The membership fee structure needs to be revamped so that teachers will pay on the basis of the salary bracket into which they fall, with the minimum the same as now.

The reports of some of the committes and commissions were disappointing. Attention should be given to these commissions with the executive committee seeing to it that the committees and commissions submit a plan of action, a schedule of activities and a defined goal.

"The Pageant of Progress" should be a continuing feature. It could be carried on by the colleges and given focus and emphasis during the observance of National Negro History Week. The ASTA should also list its achievements annually. What, for instance, could the ASTA single out as its most significant achievement for the past association year? Over a 75-year period, what can the ASTA point to with pride as some of its achievements?

Is the record of ASTA members in voter-registration better this year than it was last year? Is teacher security improved because of the work of the association? What are some of the distinctions which come to some of its members since the last association year?

The Pageant of Progress" as entertainment was excellent. The performance of the actors, the supporting singers and musicians, all reflected talent, training and a fine sense of stage. The scenes dealing with the late W. C. Handy were good theater, the acting superb, the scrip clever, crispy and authenic.

The flesh-and-blood exhibit of some of the Alabama achievers and makers of history, was and unforgettable experience. Here were living heroes of American history, native or adopted sons and daughters of Alabama, who were being presented.

Enroute from Ben Moore Hotel in the party which escorted Joe Louis to the Auditorium-Arena, the conversation was about the condition of Mr. Handy, the incomparable composer, who at the time was sinking. The Bomber expressed concern. Unavoidable the Robinson-Basilio fight came up. The Bomber was a ringside guest. Now we were approaching the place where the former Tan Tormentor was to be presented.

For one who saw Beale Avenue (Memphis, Tenn.) in other days, heard the famous blues singers as a kid, and who in later days have read critical essays on the blues and the vocalists who gave them life, the incidents from Handy's life did not help but touched. There is something about the "St. Louis Blue" which thrills me. I heard Ma' Rainey, Bessie Smith, Ethel Waters and others sing the blues in their heyday.

When one tries to sing away his troubles, his sorrows, his heartaches, and does it in an easing way, does he have the blues?

ASTA's Diamond Jubilee Celebration Set March 26

By EMORY O. JACKSON

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (SNS) — Depicted progress and a proposed program of new services were vying for the spotlight at the three-day Diamond Jubilee Celebration of the Alabama State Teachers Association.

The 75th annual ASTA convention, which opened March 26, was scheduled to climax with a giant "Schools on Parade" super-pageant at the Coliseum here.

Vernon McDaniel, who resigned the ASTA presidency when he accepted the executive scretaryship of the Teachers State Association of Texas, was one of the guest speakers.

Other speakers included L. T. Bacote, vice - president of the American Teachers Association; Councilman Williams T. Patrick of Detroit, Mich.; R. B. Martson of Washington, D. C., membership of director of the NEA and Mrs. Bessie S. Estell, of Birmingham, ASTA president.

What was believed would be a lively business was set for Friday afternoon. Results from the election will be announced at this meeting. The delegates assembly had before it some proposed changes to the constitution and a series of committee and commission reports.

The ASTA executive committee held its annual meeting Tuesday night in Headquarters Building. Its report and recommendations were to be placed before two sessions, Thursday and Friday afternoon. Almost certain to come up is the long authorized employment of a full time executive secretary, contingent upon when the association has in hand the necessary funds to assure the success of such a program.

It was learned from an authenic source that did not want to be identified that certain developments made the employment of a full - time paid executive secretary unpredictable. (1.) That screening of applicants was restricted to consideration of persons presently identified actively and executively with classroom education. (2) That the name of only one of the screened applicants will be recommended to the executive committee for employment. (3) Dr. Jr. Garrick Hardy, incumbent non-salaried executive secretary has the inside track for the job. (4) One strong ASTA factotum is understood to be lukewarm toward the idea of the employment of what would amount to an independent manger of the ASTA who would be obligated wholly to the teachers.

Should the postition be offered to Dr. Hardy, the single name that likely will be recommended and he refused, or postponed acceptance or conditioned it otherwise, that would delay the hiring of a full-time, no-strings-attached exesutive secretary, and in essence accomplish the delay sought by the other side, this source explained.

Robert E. Lawson of Sylacauga is chairman of the criterion committee which was instructed to provide a yardstick by which applicants for the AST executive secretaryship should be measured. He is a member of the executive committee and is not expected to stand for re-election. Two years ago he made an unsuccessful run for the presidency of the association.

It would not be surprising to see Mr. Lawson actually work hard to bring about the employment of a manager of the ASTA at the current session. He would be able to take personal pride in saying that he contributed to the most important step ever taken by the association which refused him the honor throw his weight behind those who lean toward immediate employment of a full-time secretary. Mrs. Estell, who is certain of election to a full term as president, is in a strong position to dispatch her wishes through the leaders of this delegation, Henry J. Williams, president of the Birmingham Negro Teachers Association and chairman of the powerful ASTA vote commission, is expected to signalize the views of Mrs. Estell who is a member of his BNTA delegation.

of being its presidents.

But there are some leaders from Birmingham who do not share this latter analysis.

Delegates from ASTA District IV which includes the five school systems of Jefferson County were scheduled to hold a caucus Thursday. It is believed that W. C. Presley, coordinator of District IV will

One is a Montgomery-born scientist, who now heads his own research laboratory. The other is the renowned "Brown Bomber" of the prize ring.

Montgomery Negroes who grew up around the 900 block of south Holt street just after the turn of the century may remember a bookwormish boy named Percy Lavon Julian.

He is now Dr. Julian, head of the Percy Julian Laboratories, who won prominence for his discoveries in the field of soya proteins and steroids.

Dr. Julian headed the department of chemistry in Howard University, Washington, D.C., before he entered industrial research. He formerly directed research for the Glidden Co. of Chicago.

The official statement of response will be made by Dr. Charles W. Orr ATA President for 1957-58 and Director of Instruction at Alabama A&M College.

Dr. William H. Gray, Pastor of Bright Hope Baptist Church in Philadelphia and Host-President to ATA at its previous last meeting in Florida in 1957, will be the featured speaker for the annual program dinner which is scheduled for Monday night this year rather than Tuesday night. Previous Banquet-Program Speakers have included Dr. Horace Mann Bond in 1955, Dr. Charles H. Wesley in 1956, and Dr. John W. Davis in 1957.

The sessions on Monday will include the Symposium-Presentations on Monday morning and the Interest-Group Discussion-Sessions on Monday afternoon, relating to the Convention theme, "Appraising Our Circumstance in 1958 . . . Educational Implications and Pedagogical Obligations." At the Business Sessions, the Delegates will receive reports of a very outstanding record-achievement of 20,000 annual members for this ATA year which is the 19th year of volunteer. non-salaried service of Dr. H. Councill Trenholm as Executive Secretary. The associated Executive Officers include Dr. J. F. Drake, President of Alabama A&M College, as Chairman of the Trustee Board and Mr. Lucius T. Bacote of Dublin, Georgia as Vice President, and Dr. Walter N. Ridley, Dean of St. Paul's College, as Treasurer.

Dr. R. Lanier keynotes annual teachers confab

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—Dr. Ralph O'Hara Lanier, special international consultant and project director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, New York City, gave the keynote address at the American Teachers Association's 55th annual convention at Bethune-Cookman College.

Dr. Lanier challenged the 400 officers and delegates to think seriously of their responsibility in leading those in their charge to take their places in the "world of tomorrow."

He noted the historical experiences of peoples and civilizations who had risen from slavery and oppression to ranks of power only to become more ruthless than their oppressors.

THE WORLD traveler, scholar and consultant stated that America can only hold her own in the world by giving out full democracy to all peoples.

He told of the formation of Liberia by freed slaves from America, which without arms, has retained its sovereignty and cited the attitude of present day African nations which declare for a spirit of 'peace and coeration', demanding self rule and independence."

He said the spirit of teachers must be to qualify to do a first-class job in better teaching, to prove their worth. He believes, under the present "intercultural trends," the caste and segregation of South Africa and other countries will soon fade away.

The association with a membership of 20,234 represents the educators of 29 of the states in the union, and the District of Columbia. The ATA, organized 21 years ago, was an outgrowth of the National Association for Teachers in Colored Schools. The parent body was organized in 1903.

Dr. J. F. Drake, President of Alabama A & M College at Normal, Ala., presided at the initial session of this three-day confab which began here Sunday afternoon and will close Tuesday night.

Alabama State College President Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, executive secretary of the ATA for the past 19 years was a program participant Sunday afternoon. Dr. Harry V. Richardson, former chaplain at Tuskegee Institute, now incumbent president, Gamma Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., was programmed as Memorial Hour speaker.

Alabama has won two distinctions having the largest active membership and the largest number of delegates in attendance here. According to Dr. Trenholm's advanced report, Alabama has held this honor for several years.

Dr. J. T. Brooks, administrative assistant to President Trenholm at Alabama State College, Montgomery, presided over Sunday night's session. He is Region 11 vice president of the ATA. Keynote address for this service was delivered by Dr. R. O'Hara Lanier of the Phelps-Stokes Fund. He spoke on "The Impact of Color in a World Crisis."

A symposium, group discussion, executive secretary's and committee reports are part of Monday's agenda. The association's president, Dr. Charles W. Orr, Dean of Instruction at Alabama A & M College shared the spotlight in Sunday's session and will preside over a portion of the business Monday.

ARLINGTON EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Teacher Unit Bars Negro Admission

A motion to merge Arlington white and Negro teacher organization was tabled indefinitely yesterday by the legislative council of the Arlington Education Association, the County's white teachers' organization.

The council rejected the motion unanimously on the recommendation of its constitutional committee. There was no discussion.

The council, composed of elected representatives from each white school in the county, is the official voice of the association.

The motion to combine the two teacher organizations was presented to the council on Oct. 16 by George Taylor, a teacher at Wakefield High School, and was referred to the constitutional committee.

Richard G. Neal, executive secretary of the Council, said the Committee gave three reasons for recommending against the motion:

- "Adverse reaction" which resulted when the association's constitution was amended four years ago to eliminate the word "white" from the membership requirements.
- "Unsettled conditions within the State and the community."
- A report from Robert F. Williams, executive secretary of the parent Virginia Education Association that "any local association uniting with a local of the (Negro) Virginia Teachers' Association would automatically be expelled."

Neal said a majority of the County's white teachers "would still have no objection to combining the two groups." But he said, "the Council feels it is politically expedient to let this go by the way until the storm blows over."

CHICAGO TEACHERS UNION

Teachers Back Union Leader

Approximately 500 teachers representing almost every elementary school in the city went on record in complete support of the statement of John D. Fewkes, president of the Chicago Teachers Union, made before the Board of Education at the employees hearing on Wednesday, Oct. 29.

President Fewkes' statement was to the effect that the school administration and the Board of Education have allowed other matters to push teachers' welfare problems into the background thus causing a lowering in teacher morale.

The teachers met at 32 W. Randolph st., to discuss the problems of elementary classroom teachers. It was unanimously agreed that teacher morale has been lowered by the ure of the school administration and the board of Education to reduce the class load of elementary teachers, excessive record keeping, innumerable reports, the number of extra duties; to provide a free period for high school teachers, a lunch period free of duties for elementary teachers; to adequately improve teachers' salaries and sick leave; and to quickly and fairly resolve the problems of individual teachers.

Schools Hold Key to Future, State's Negro Teachers Told

COLUMBUS (AP)—The future of America is in the classroom, Dr. John W. Davis, president emeritus of West Virginia State College, Thursday told Negro classroom teachers gathered here for the 40th annual convention of the Georgia Teachers and Education Assn.

"Teachers must provide leadership for our democratic way of life and promote an educational program for living in our democracy and the larger world community," Dr. Davis said.

The West Virginia educator was one of three keynote speakers at Thursday's session of the three-day convention being staged at local Negro schools and in the Municipal Auditorium.

Other prominent speakers included Dr. W. K. Payne, president of Savannah State College, speaker at a general assembly meeting during the afternoon, and Mrs. Margaret Stevenson, executive secretary of the department of classroom teachers, National Education Assn. who spoke at a meeting Thursday night.

The address by Dr. Davis, called one of the most important of the convention, stressed the importance of world education trends.

He listed these trends as the school programs which are being set up by 296 American corporations, the apprentice training program for industry, proposed changes in elementary and secondary education, and the scholarship program in general.

Dr. Davis said millions of dollars are being spent by industry to better educational standards but "only a handful of eligible young people" are taking advantage of the apprentice training programs offered by "trade unionism."

He said the proposed changes on elementary and secondary education will place an emphasis on the academically talented second year school pupils, and "radical but necessary changes" in the traditional high school programs of this country.

Potential Status Of Negro Teacher Termed Unlimited

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES
(World Managing Editor)

The potential economic, political and educational status of the Negro teacher in the South is unlimited, even if presently hard to assess section-wise, the Rev. L. H. Pitts, executive secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Educational Association, told a Butler Street YMCA Hungry Club audience Wednesday.

Pointing out that teacher associations usually encourage registration and voting, Rev. Mr. Pitts noted that reports from Terrell County, Ga., indicated that the political status of the Negro teacher "is either nil or his potential strength is threat not to be allowed, even with a master's degree." Mr. Pitts apparently was referring to the widely publicized refusal of registrars to register [illegible] educationally qualified teachers).

"Economic fears are real in the changing South," the speaker noted, citing the firing of Negro teachers in Oklahoma, Missouri, Louisiana, South Carolina and Georgia because of integration moves, alleged association with the NAACP and dominance of state politicians. Mr. Pitts pointed out that there is an oversupply of Negro teachers in the South, but said that the day will come when "all qualified teachers will be placed."

On the Georgia scene, the GTEA official revealed wide discrepancies in provisions for trade schools and junior colleges for Negroes. For example, Mr. Pitts pointed out that there is a current appropriation of nearly one-half million dollars for trade schools for white citizens in Americus and Clarkesville, none for Negroes. Three junior colleges in Tifton, Douglas and Cochran have budgets of over $2,000,000, while there are no such appropriations for Negro junior colleges, the speaker said. It was also revealed that thousands of dollars are being lost to the Negro communities of the state because some 65,000 youths fail to attend school.

The Negro teacher "is a nurse, doctor, mother, janitor and what have you," Mr. Pitts noted. "She plays to heterogeneous audience each day, but her most cherished audience is that bright eyed youth who says I want to know."

"As the more than 93,000 Negro teachers of the South improve their economic, educational and social status, the political status will increase," Mr. Pitts declared, adding: "And the day will come in the South, yes in Georgia, when school teachers will request and receive general acceptance as a citizen."

Moderator for the Wednesday Hungry Club session was Dr. John Reid of Atlanta University.

KEY MAN and key-speaker at closing Kentucky Education Association session are Newton S. Thomas, Caverna, who won Lincoln Key, and Mrs. Nila Magidoff, New York, who discussed her "Discovery of America."

K.E.A. Honors Negro Teacher At Caverna

Lincoln Key Awarded Science-Math Instructor

A Negro teacher at Caverna High School is the winner of the Kentucky Education Association's 1958 Lincoln Key award.

Newton S. Thomas, 46, was presented the key at last night's closing session of the K.E.A. convention at Jefferson County Armory for his "devotion to duty" and his "great influence and promotion of the cause of brotherhood."

Thomas teaches science and mathematics at Caverna, which lies between Horse Cave and Cave City in Hart and Barren counties.

Was Principal 21 Years

Before integration at Caverna High last September, Thomas was principal of the Negro school in Horse Cave for 21 years. It was closed down.

Thomas said 35 of Caverna High's 350 pupils are Negroes. There have been no problems since integration was effected, he declared.

He gave the same formula for smooth integration that he gives his pupils for smooth sailing academically:

"Preparation and study."

Thomas is a native of Georgetown. He holds a bachelor-of-science degree from Kentucky State College and a master's degree in education from University of Kentucky. His wife, Ella, is a nurse.

Other K.E.A. news is on Page 4. What teachers and pupils did during K.E.A. week will be a feature of tomorrow's women's section.

Mrs. Magidoff Speaks

The three-day convention's final speaker was Mrs. Nila Magidoff, the Russian-born wife of author and former foreign correspondent Robert Magidoff. She discussed her "discovery of America."

Mrs. Magidoff, who once taught Russian at the University of Louisville and now lives in New York, told the K.E.A. that the better people speak each other's language the better the hopes for peace and freedom.

"I don't know how we will meet with the Russian people—at war or at peace," she said.

Officers Are Elected

The All-Kentucky High School Orchestra opened the evening session with a program that ranged from Bach and Schubert to a "Jaz Pizzicato."

Henry Sopkin, who conducts the Atlanta Symphony, led the 98 high-school musicians.

All three unopposed candidates for K.E.A. offices were elected yesterday.

Theye were Miss Virginia Murrell, Bellevue, 231 votes, president; Dr. Harry Sparks, Murray, 229 votes, president-elect, and Miss Grace Weller, Elizabethtown, 231 votes, vice-president.

Three Get Write-Ins

A total of 478 delegates were eligible to vote. The K.E.A. constitution requires a secret ballot, even though candidates are unopposed.

In the balloting yesterday, three Louisville educators got one write-in vote apiece.

They are City School Superintendent Omer Carmichael, for president-elect; T. Vance Rose, principal of Charles D. Jacob School, for president, and Paschal deSanctis, principal of California and John C. Strother schools, for vice-president.

Integration Leaves 300 Okla. Teachers Jobless

DALLAS, Tex. (ANP) — Integration of schools in Oklahoma and Texas has brought a knotty problem—what to do with the Negro teachers?

In Oklahoma, 300 Negro teachers have lost their jobs as a result of school integration. This information was imparted by Dr. Virgil F. Dougherty of Oklahoma City University, at the annual convention of the Southwestern Social Science Association.

Dr. Dougherty said: "Integration of Negro students have not posed a difficult problem, but the integration of Negro teachers is proving more difficult.

"Before integration, there were 1,537 Negro teachers in Oklahoma, whereas there are now approximately 1,200."

In Corpus Christi, Tex., 14 candidates for school board posts aired their views on Negro teachers integration. All agreed that integration of these teachers into the school system is inevitable, but said much study and careful planning need be applied before it will happen.

Meanwhile in Washington, Congress was urged to put in "firm anti-integration safeguards" in any school bills it contemplates in the future.

Southeast Teachers Are Lowest Paid In Nation, Govt. Says

By I. N. S.

The Southeast's government employees and school teachers are among the lowest paid workers in the nation.

The U. S. Department of Commerce released figures Tuesday that showed the seven-state area near the bottom of the list in "median" pay among government workers and teachers.

MISSISSIPPI

Merrill C. Bolton, Commerce Department field manager, said that Mississippi ranked second from the bottom in both wages in government workers and teachers in the nation.

Mississippi median rate of pay for state workers was $2,431 and for teachers $2,670.

OTHER STATES

The other Southeastern states ranked predominately in the lower in both wages to governme employees and teachers.

Florida, however, was an notable exception. The sunshine state ranked 25th from the top among workers with a wage of $3,482, while its school teachers ranked 24th in salary with a median wage of $4,090.

GENERAL

Educators Urged Hike In Teachers' Salaries

By C. R. WARD
President, Fairfield Teachers Association

CLEVELAND, Ohio — Education cannot fully serve the national interest until teachers' salaries reach professional levels.

This point has been driven home to the more than 15,000 educators attending the 96th annual National Education Association convention which winds up a week of meetings here July 4.

Many of the nationally-known convention speakers went a step further to declare that federal support is the only hope for a major breakthrough in this economic plight of the public schools.

During their scores of work sessions, convention delegates have heard chapter and verse on the present status of teachers' salaries as described by speakers who earlier this year testified before Congressional subcommittees considering aid-to-education bills.

Many of the delegates got their first full-dress explanation of the NEA's billion-dollar teacher salary and construction proposal which has been introduced in the U. S. Senate and House. This legislation calls for federal sharing in the basic financial support of education. The measure is limited to teacher salaries, classroom construction Fields outside education pay a high salary premium for successful education achievement; yet teachers, in the top 10 percent of the population in educational achievements, are paid salaries hovering close to the average wage of all workers.

This year, 1 out of 4 classroom teachers is receiving a salary of less than $3,500. Some 46,000 teachers are being paid less than $2,500.

The national median for beginning teachers in 1957 was $3,450 with the figure below $2,000 in some states. Median starting salaries for 1957 bachelors degree graduates were $5,220 for chemists and $5,520 for chemical engineers.

NEA convention speakers urged these future changes in the salary picture:

Teacher salary schedules must be restructed to allow at least a doubling of minimums with 8 to 10 years.

At a minimum, teachers' salaries should be 50 per cent higher than the average payroll worker. Projecting this advance on the basis of recent trends would raise teachers to an average salary of $7,550 in four years.

Boards of education will have to give greater recognition to the value of advanced degrees. An industrial employer now places a higher premium on master's and doctor's degrees than the typical school board.

Theme of this year's NEA convention is "Our Future Goes To School Today." and basic equipment in public elementary and secondary schools. States have full discretion in dividing allotment between salaries and construction.

Exerpts from some of the speeches brought out these facts:

The answer to the question of how much teachers should be paid does not turn on problems of teacher welfare but of national welfare. Today's national average salary of all public school teachers is $4,650.

For the whole economic cycle from 1929 to 1957, this rich and powerful nation has rewarded teaching not as a profession, but as just another occupation. During the past 50 years, the average term increased about 23 per cent while industrial and office work cut back from a six-day, 48 hour work week to a five-day week of not more than 40 hours.

A survey of 13 industrial occupations from 1904 to 1953 showed median salary increases of 122 per cent. For seven groups of teachers, it was 37 per cent. Clearly, the economic status of teachers was lower in comparison to the other workers at the middle of the 20th century than at its beginning.

During the past 20 years, teachers' average salaries have remained consistently below the average personal income of employed members of the labor force. The 1950's have seen no significant change in the relatives status of teachers. Average earnings of all wage earners from 1939 to 1957 increased 231.5 per cent whereas teachers climbed only 213.4 per cent.

Teachers Censured

School teachers have been under fire from three angles recently.

First, the teachers of Central High School in Little Rock, Ark. — There teachers testified that the presence of colored children had caused "deterioration of the educational process."

To them, the eloquent Mr. Lee Rankin, U.S. Soliciter General, addressing the U.S. Supreme Court, uttered a withering rebuke.

He said: Certainly teachers would recognize as part of the educational process their responsibility to teach their children:

(A) The necessity of law-enforcement;

(B) That the Constitution, and each of the rights every citizen has under it, is precious;

(C) That if Little Rock teachers tell their children that the courts will bow to force and violence, then these teachers destroy the whole educational process.

THE SECOND critical comment on teachers comes from Dr. Martin Luther King in his new book, "Stride Toward Freedom," just published this week by Harpers.

Said Dr. King: Before any real racial progress could be made in the Montgomery bus fight, something had to be remedied in the educated group.

Montgomery was crippled by their indifference, lack of participation in any move toward better racial conditions, a sort of acceptance of things as they were.

There were exceptions, Dr. King admitted. But the vast majority were indifferent and complacent.

They were afraid. Many were employed in vulnerable positions and a forthright stand in the area of racial justice might result in loss of a job.

They didn't want to jeopardize their economic security, so they steered clear of any move to alter the status quo.

This is not the whole story, said Dr. King.

Even in areas such as voting—where they would not be accused of tampering with the established order, the educated group had an indifference that for a period appeared incurable.

CRITICAL REMARKS number three came from a local Masonic speaker who declared: Our teachers are so busy teaching the minor glories of Greek, Roman and English history, that they fail to teach our children that black Egypt ruled the world longer than any of them.

And, he said, it was we Africans, who for eight centuries, ruled the world and gave us the bases upon which it built its government, law, morals, medicine, philosophy, art, architecture, and religion.

DO OUR teachers and educators deserve the storm of criticism and abuse heaped upon them?

Yes and no.

Some of them, yes, the majority of them, no.

Freedom of speech for the teacher, individual freedom to be a first-class citizen and participate vigorously in community affairs — these freedoms must first be so sacred to the people and their leaders, that they create an atmosphere in which it can exist—either openly or underground.

Even Dr. King admits that Montgomery educators seemed incurably indifferent only in the beginning.

Not only educators, but most Montgomery citizens were apathetic until Dr. King and his associates kindled the spark of Ghandian non-violent resistance.

As in all professions, educators have a low, middle and high capacity for independent thinking.

Teachers do not fail a community

SALARIES SO LOW

Many Teachers Convinced Slavery Still Existing

By G. K. HODENFIELD
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the first teachers in colonial America were virtual slaves, working off a term in debtors' prison.

There are many teachers today who insist that times haven't changed a bit.

Perhaps the almost uniquely American attitude of disdain for teachers is the primary reason for this country's teacher shortage. It shows in salary schedules that almost all educators say are too low to lure good teachers into the field and keep them there.

By the latest estimates, U.S. public schoools are short some 135,000 qualified teachers. The results are overcrowded classrooms, double sessions, and emergency teachers who aren't really qualified for the job.

The recent report of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc., said the root problem of the teacher shortage is financial.

"Salaries must be raised, immediately and substantially," the report noted. "Those (teachers) with more than modest financial needs and responsibilities can only solve their problems by becoming administrators, or leaving education altogether."

In 1957-58, the average salary for all classroom teachers was $4,520 a year. But that figure is deceptive. California and New York hire the most teachers, and they pay the highest salaries. That brings the average up.

One out of every four classroom teachers last year received less than $3,500. In eight states the average annual salary of the entire teaching staff was less than $3,500.

MISSISSIPPI

In three states—North Dakota, Mississippi and Kentucky, one teacher in three was paid less than $2,500 for the school year. The average for all of Mississippi was just over that: $2,525.

If we use the national average of $4,520, it works out to about $120 a week for the school year, or about $86 a week if the salary is supposed to cover a full 12-month period.

On the basis of a 40-hour week, that $120 works out to an even $3 an hour. That's a nice round figure that sounds fairly impressive — but here again the figure is deceptive. The teacher who works a 40-hour week is a rare bird, indeed.

Most surveys show that teachers work anywhere from 50 to 60 hours a week on school chores—teaching, preparing lessons, grading papers, taking tickets at basketball games, chaperoning dances, and organizing and supervising outside activities.

At 50 to 60 hours a week, the pay scale drops to $2 to $2.40 an hour. That is considerably below the pay of the average plumber, carpenter, bricklayer or other skilled workman in the building trades, and even further below the pay scale in most other professions.

These weekly and hourly figures are based on the national annual average of $4,520. If we consider Mississippi's yearly average of $2,520, it comes out to $68 aweek for a 37½-week school year, or about $49 a week on a full-year basis. And the hourly rate, even for the school year alone, drops to between $1.13 and $1.36.

To earn this salary, Mississippi requires that a teacher have at least a bachelor's degree from a four-year college or university, with from 18-24 semester hours in professional education courses. Since this pay scale doesn't attract many such teachers, Mississippi and other states have to rely heavily on "emergency" teachers, some of whom have had little more than a high school education.

At the other end of the salary scale sits California, paying its classroom teachers an average annual salary of $5,750. Using the same basis as above, this works out to either $153 or $110 a week.

Even so, California is having trouble finding enough teachers. Officials in other states complain of California raiding parties that scour the plains east of the Rockies, find good teachers and lure them West with the promise of bigger paychecks.

In any discussion of teachers' salaries, nothing muddies the waters so much as the length of the school year. Someone is sure to say, "I don't think teachers do too badly, considering they work only nine months a year."

And there's no doubt about it, a three-month vacation every year is a very attractive fringe benefit — if you can afford it.

There aren't any exact figures available, but most surveys indicate that two of every three men teachers have to work at summer jobs to make both ends meet. The ratio for women teachers seems to be about one in eight.

Integration Row Hits NEA Group

Georgian Upsets Session At National Meeting

CLEVELAND, July 4.—(AP)—The National Education Association ran afoul of the thorny question of school integration Friday.

A parliamentary move by a member of the Georgia delegation broke up the afternoon session and promised fireworks for the convention's final session Friday night.

The convention was debating a motion for "a study, a survey and a report with recommendations" on integration. The motion, introduced by Walter Ludwig, teacher from Mamaroneck, N. Y. Senior High School, called for the survey to be made during the coming year with a report to be made at the St. Louis convention next summer.

When it appeared that the motion might be approved by the delegates, Wallace Winn of Savannah, Ga., said he doubted there was a quorum present and he moved to adjourn the meeting.

Winn's motion was seconded by Don Thomas of Illinois, speaking as an individual, but the motion was voted down.

Winn then asked that it be determined whether a quorum was present. A tabulation by state chairmen indicated it was not and president Lyman Ginger adjourned the meeting.

Officials of the NEA said the group meeting Friday was about 500 short of the necessary simple majority of approximately 4,600 voting delegates registered at the convention.

Dr. William G. Carr, executive secretary of the NEA, said that until the parliamentary hassle got under way "this had been a perfectly united convention."

Dr. Carr said he saw no reason why the NEA couldn't make the suggested survey and report in view of the vast resources it has.

Dr. Ruth Stout of Topeka, Kan., was officially named the new president of the NEA, and took office Friday night.

Miss Stout, who has served for the past year as vice president, was unopposed in the election.

Advisor ygroup discloses—

Negro teachers paid more than whites in Alabama

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 16—The most surprising disclosure made by the Alabama Education Commission and its various subcommittees studying school finances and other problems is that the state average yearly pay for Negro teachers is higher than that for white teachers. Several commission members blinked in amazement.

Reason given for this is that "colored teachers, on an average, have higher degrees than white teachers and enjoy a higher rate of pay under our state pay evaluation system."

This comment was contained in a report by William C. Jones of Birmingham, chairman of the advisory committee to the commission's subcommittee on financing education.

Negro pay $3434

IT REVEALED that the 1957-58 state average for Negro teachers' pay was $3434 for nine months, compared with $3402 for white teachers.

TAYLOR

Jones, controller of Alabama By-Products Corp., said these startling figures were taken from the payroll records in the State Education Department.

Furthermore, the advisory committee's report showed that the average combined pay for both white and Negro teachers from 1949-50 to 1957-58 has increased 66 per cent—10 per cent more than the 56 per cent gain in per capita income in Alabama during the same period.

Degrees considered

THE ADVISORY group's report, made to the subcommittee on financing education (which is headed by Mervyn H. Sterne, Birmingham investment banker) and submitted to the entire commission during its hearing here Friday, stated:

"The pay of colored teachers has advanced considerably more than the pay of white teachers.

"This difference arose from the program begun since 1950 to equalize colored and white (teachers') salaries.

"In most county and city systems, the average pay of colored teachers is greater than the pay of white teachers. This is because the colored teachers, on an average, have higher degrees than white teachers and enjoy a higher rate of pay under our state pay evaluation system."

Whites in majority

THE ADVISORY committee report stated further:

"The number of teachers in the various county and city systems has changed considerably since 1949-50. The industrial areas have increased in number, while the farming and rural areas have decreased.

"For example, the number of teachers in Montgomery has increased 62 per cent, while the number in Coffee has decreased 14 per cent."

Jones pointed out that Alabama has more than 24,000 teachers, with white teachers considerably outnumbering Negro teachers.

Average allotment

THE ADVISORY committee's report showed that the state's average minimum program allotment in Alabama for 1957-58 was $3160 per teacher.

The average local subsidy (from cities and counties) amounted to $258 per teacher.

Jefferson County (including city systems) provided the most local aid for teachers' pay. Jefferson's local subsidy of $753 per teacher, plus $3179 from the state minimum program fund allotment, gave teachers average salaries of $3932.

Mobile placed second in local subsidy, contributing $648 per teacher to go with $3107 state minimum program fund allotment for each teacher to provide average pay there of $3758.

Montgomery, with $453 local pay per teacher, received $3288 state minimum program fund allotment for each teacher to help provide an average pay there of $3741.

Macon County contributes only $101 local subsidy per teacher. But the $3367 state minimum program allotment for each teacher enabled teachers in that county to get average pay of $3468.

Low counties

THE COMMITTEE gave samples of the low counties (also including city systems) in the matter of supplementing state pay for teachers.

For instance, Washington County, which paid $36 local subsidy per teacher, received $2924 state minimum program funds per teacher for an average of $2960.

Winston, paying $68 locally, got $2848 in state funds for a $2916 average per teacher.

Blount, in contributing $54 per teacher locally, received $2808 in state funds for an average of $2862 per teacher.

Jackson, with $56 local contributions, received $2803 in state funds for an average per teacher salary of $2859.

Ad valorem up

JONES' ADVISORY group reported that for the state as a whole assessed valuations of all property for ad valorem taxes have increased 222 per cent in Alabama since 1941.

Broken down into classifications, these increases were:

Real estate ..... 98 per cent
Personal property 232 per cent
Public utilities .... 79 per cent
Motor vehicles ... 408 per cent

Pay rate gains

THE COMMITTEE report, in giving a sampling of the percentage of teacher salary increases and gains in per capita income from 1949-50 to 1957-58, showed:

Black Belt Lowndes County white teachers received 46 per cent more, with Negro teachers getting 109 per cent more, while the per capita income was showing a gain of 31 per cent.

Black Belt Marengo County white teachers received 67 per cent increase, with Negro teachers boosted 103 per cent, while per capita income was up 48 per cent.

Central Alabama's Talladega County white teachers got 50 per cent more, with Negro teachers being raised 60 per cent during the period when per capita income was climbing 56 per cent.

Northeast Alabama's Calhoun County's white teachers had their salaries raised an average of 47 per cent and Negro teachers an average of 60 per cent while per capita income jumped 59 per cent.

ARKANSAS TEACHERS GETTING MORE PAY

Average $717 Increase Is Reported To Group

MORE HAVE BEEN HIRED

From the Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 17.—The average classroom teacher salary in Arkansas this school year is $717 more than what it was last year, Education Commissioner Arch Ford reported Friday.

Mr. Ford said tax increases and resulting higher state aid to schools had raised the statewide teacher salary to $3,133, compared to a $2,416 average last year.

The $717 increase is $83 below the goal outlined by Gov. Orval Faubus in sponsoring tax increases and teacher salary in the 1957 General Assembly. The Governor had predicted the additional money would produce an $800 yearly average increase in teacher salaries.

The reason the average didn't come up to that figure, Mr. Ford explained, was that some districts with increasing enrollments had hired additional teachers had been hired, which had the effect of stretching the increased funds "thinner" and decreasing the average salary by $79 a year.

The education commissioner made his report to the Arkansas Legislative Council, which last year had asked for a review from the Education Department on how the extra money voted for schools in the 1957 Legislature had been used.

Mr. Ford added that the average salary figure is an estimate based on the year's budget set-up. The final figure won't be available until after the present school year is over, he said.

In all, the public schools got about $14,300,000 in additional funds, for a total state outlay of about 44 millions a year. Of that amount, $13,500,000 was earmarked for teacher salaries, the education commissioner said.

The state's 423 districts this year are employing 14,404 teachers, compared to 14,049 teachers on hand last year, he added.

Mr. Ford wasn't present when the report was presented to the council, but a council spokesman said there apaprently had been no way for either the Education Department or the Legislatue to anticipate in advance how many additional teachers would be hired under the extra funds.

Council Director Marcus Halbrook also noted there was nothing under the increased appropriation to hold the increases to "existing" teachers, and that as a result the added teachers had cut down on the statewide average figure.

One Education Department spokesman said that despite the failure to meet the $800 "anticipated" average increase, the hiring of extra teachers was in itself encouraging. He said it indicated the increased teacher pay had made it easier for districts to overcome heavy teacher losses or departures which had occurred prior to salary increases.

Most of the council's meetings was devoted to a closed-door session, apparently for a discussion of a study of the Central High integration controversy. Council members, including Senator Marshall Shackelford of El Dorado, council chairman, wouldn't comment later.

Senator Shackelford would say only that the executive session "dealt with educational problems of the state." The council late last year undertook a study of the Little Rock integration controversy, possibly with a view to recommending whether a special legislative session would be desirable.

Among other items discussed publicly, the council was asked by Speaker of the House Glenn Walther of Little Rock to make a study of all organizations soliciting money for charitable purposes. The study request was an outgrowth of studies already started on activities of the Arkansas Federation of Old Folks, Inc., at Batesville.

Mother of an Integrated Student Faces Job Loss

Mrs. Lois Patillo, mother of Melba Patillo, one of the Little Rock Nine who broke the barrier [illegible] in Little Rock when enrolled at Central hi former all-white school here, entertains doubts about her position for the future.

Mrs. Patillo, who has been employed as instructor at the Jones hi school in North Little Rock, states that her contract has not been renewed for another yerr. She states that all teachers, in the system have received their contracts, which, incident places her in doubt as to her job.

Superintendent of the Northside school system, F. B. Wright stated, when contacted, that Mrs. Patillo's failure to get her contract at the present, doesn't mean that her services have been terminated. He stated further, that it is customary to withhold contracts for conferencing with the teachers, and such practices do not mean that they will be or will not be employed until after the conference.

Mrs. Patillo has been an instructor at Jones for several years.

Mrs. Patillo gets teaching job back

NORTH LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —Mrs. Lois Patillo, who was told last month that "you had better look for another job," doesn't have to look for another position after all.

Mrs. Patillo, mother of 16-year-old Melba Patillo, one of eight colored pupils who attended Central High School, will be back at Scipio A. Jones High School here next year in her same job as English teacher.

Byron R. Bogard, president of the school board, said the renewal of her contract was routine.

ACCORDING to Mrs. Patillo, Supt. F. B. Wright told her in May:

"You had better look for another job. I can't go along with you on this integration business."

She said that Mr. Wright refused to renew her contract because her daughter was attending Central High School in Little Rock.

She said the superintendent later offered her a new contract to avoid "bad publicity" with the provision that she look for another job in 1959.

MRS. PATILLO, whose daughter was the first to be physically attacked when attempting to enroll at Central High, said Wright and E. H. Hunter, principal at Jones High, told her altogether five times that she should "look for another job because of my part in the integration dispute."

Wright said several weeks ago that the contracts of Mrs. Patillo and several other Jones High School teachers had been held up.

He refused comment on why Mrs. Patillo, who has been teaching English and French at Jones for seven years, said that her contract was not renewed because her daughter was enrolled in Central High School.

Mrs. Patillo holds a master's degree from the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville and has also taught at Shorter College in North Little Rock and at Arkansas Baptist College in Little Rock.

14% Teacher Pay Raise Is Sent to White House

Washington Post

The District Board of Education had proposed an increase averaging 33 per cent and the District Education Association had sought 60 per cent.

House-Cleared Bill Sets Minimum Salary at $4500

Washington D.C.

Legislation granting District teachers and school officers an average 14 per cent pay raise was cleared by the House yesterday and sent to the President.

The new pay scale will provide a starting salary of $4500 for teachers with a bachelor's degree, a $600 increase over the present scale.

Teachers with a master's degree will start at $5000 and those with 30 academic credits beyond the master's at $5400.

The teachers in each category would receive 13 step increases totaling $2100, bringing top pay for teachers with the bachelor's degree to $6600; those with a master's to $7100 and the master's with additional training to $7300. The present maximum is $6500.

The new scale will bring Washington from 16th to 5th among the Nation's 18 cities with population of more than 500,000 in maximum salaries offered teachers.

High school principals will receive a maximum of $10,800; junior high school principals, $10,500, and elementary principals, $10,100.

The House action was on a conference report approved by the Senate last Saturday night. The pay raises are retroactive to Jan. 1 and will cost the District approximately $6 million, including back payments, this year.

The Senate originally voted a pay raise averaging nearly 18 per cent but the figure was cut down when the House-approved 14 per cent was accepted by the conference committee.

Principal of Negro School Suspended 10 Days by Board

Robert K. Lynon, principal of the Negro College Park School, was ordered suspended for 10 days yesterday on school board charges of insubordination.

Lynon's suspension grew out of "repeated failure to submit a proper audit of the internal funds of this school." He failed to appear before the board yesterday morning, as ordered, to explain the school's audit.

During the 10-day suspension, Lyon will have the opportunity of straightening up his accounts, the board said, but unless he does he will face action on his dismissal after that.

Two other principals whose accounts were not in order appeared before the board yesterday morning as ordered. School Supt. Ish Brant said their difficulties had arisen because of misinformation on procedure.

Washington D. C. Integrates Teachers Successfully

14 m (4)

(Eighth in a Series)

by Frank L. Stanley, Sr.

During the past eight weeks, the Louisville Defender has printed a series of fact-finding articles on Louisville teacher segregation. This planned series was occasioned by the failure of the superintendent's office and the Board of Education to initiate any type of teacher integration or to even plan toward this second necessary desegregation step.

Thus far, by surveys, interviews and Board of Education statistics, the Defender articles have shown (1) the voiced objections of Superintendent Carmichael have no basis in fact, (2) white citizens and principals overwhelmingly favor teacher integration, (3) more than 60% white teachers will work with Negro fellow professionals, (4) the Board of Education while admitting teacher integration is inevitable is delaying all action until the Superintendent advances a plan; (5) every Negro teacher wants professional integration and (6) unless teachers are hired without regard to race, Negro teachers will continue to be few in number.

20 SUPERINTENDENTS

To project the question further, the Defender circularized 20 superintendents both in and outside Kentucky. The questions asked were: (1) How many Negro teachers and principals were employed in your system in 1954? How many are there now (1958)? Percentage to whites? (2) When did you first assign Negro teachers to mixed classes? How many such teachers are there in your system now? (3) Are there any Negro supervisors attached to the Board of Education office? (5) librarians (b) coaches (c) band directors (d) principals (e) assistant principals? (5) What community and professional objections to integration of Negro teachers did the board encounter?

Replies from Kentucky superintendents indicate that some 15 Negro teachers in seven school districts were added to white faculties. In no instance has there been serious objection.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT CHANCE

Galen Martin, former executive director of the Kentucky Council on Human Relations, wrote: "The successful beginnings of teacher desegregation have aided Kentucky's progress toward the goal of equal opportunity for all people. The desegregated pupil will not be integrated until he has an equal chance for employment. . . . Experience to date with teacher desegregation, even though limited, shows that pupils, teachers and parents can accept teacher desegregation as they have pupil desegregation."

Defender 9-4-58

Among other cities surveyed, Washington, D. C. shows a very marked contrast to Louisville. Integration has increased the number of Negro teachers as the chart below shows:

How many Negro teachers and principals were employed in your school system in 1954?

Oct. 22, 1954	Teachers	%	Principals and Ass't Principals	%
White	1,804	48.2	92	52.9
Negro	1,935	51.8	82	47.1
Total	3,739		174
How many are there now (1958)?
White	1,619	39.4	95	49.7
Negro	2,490	60.6	96	50.3
Total	4,109		191

NEGRO SUPERVISORS

Washington integrated teachers with pupils in September, 1954; as a result the District now has 35 Negro supervisors and officers, attached to the Board of Education: Deputy Superintendent in charge of Coordinated Educational Services; Administrative Assistant to Deputy Superintendent; Assistant Superintendent in charge of Vocational High Schools, Adult Education, Evening, and Summer Schools; Assistant Superintendent in charge of Pupil Appraisal, Study, and Attendance; Assistant Superintendent in charge of Elementary Schools; Director in charge of Curriculum; Director in charge of Special Services; Director in charge of Elementary Education Curriculum; Director in charge of Elementary Education Administration; Supervising Director, Department of Pupil Appraisal, Study and Attendance; Supervising Director, Department of Business; Supervising Director, Department of Mathematics; Supervising Director, Department of Military Science and Tactics; Supervising Director, Department of Music; Supervising Director, Reading Clinic; Supervising Director, Department of Health, Physical Education, Athletics and Safety; Supervising Director, Department of Industrial Arts; Supervising Director, Summer Schools; Supervising Director, Elementary Education; Supervising Director, Department of English; Supervising Director, Department of Industrial Education; Assistant Director, Practical Nursing Program; Assistant Director, Department of Science; Assistant Director, Food Services; three Supervisors, Officer of Director of Elementary Education; Supervisor, Visiting Instruction Corps Supervisor, Visual Instruction; Clinical Psychologist, Department of Pupil Appraisal, Study, and Attendance: and Chief Attendance officer.

OBJECTION INCONSEQUENTIAL

Superintendent Carl F. Hansen states: "The amount of community and professional objection to integration of Negro teachers in this city was limited. In one instance I recall a group of parents in one elementary school attempted to organize community sentiment against the assignment of Negro teachers to their particular school. This group of about 20 parents was unsuccessful in enlisting the support of the Parent-Teacher Association and was unable to influence the Board of Education on this issue.

"There is no specific evidence of professional objection to the integration of faculties in terms of recorded data. However, I know from review of reports that some problems of adjustment occurred. In one case, for example, one white teacher in a newly integrated faculty openly refused to eat in the same lunch room with a Negro teacher. However, this attitude lasted only a short time because there was general lack of support for this type of discourtesy.

"On the other hand, I have had reports come to me personally of the satisfaction felt by pupils, parents and principals with the service of teachers assigned to all-white schools. I think off hand of two instances of outstanding teachers assigned to a white senior high school where the two have been generously received by all members because of their high level capabilities and evident sincerity in working with students."

In succeeding issues, The Defender will report on other cities similar to Louisville that have desegregated faculties.

DeKalb County Board To Weigh Evidence In Case Of Teacher

Atlanta World, Atlanta, Ga., Sat. 1-18-58 p. 1

BY EDDIE WILLIAMS

DECATUR, Ga.—The fate of an ousted Lynwood Park school teacher will hang in the balance until some time in March when the DeKalb County Board of Education convenes to weigh evidence presented in a demand hearing.

The last part of the hearing in the case of James Cosby, former Lynwood Park science teacher, came to an abrupt climax late Friday when a witness attempted to point out deficiencies in the school and its new principal who filed charges of negligence, incompetence and insubordination against Cosby.

14m(4)

Mrs. Annie B. Truby, former president of the Lynwood Park Parent-Teacher Association, was promptly dismissed after she testified that principal Harvey Coleman had demonstrated disregard for the welfare of his students.

The hearing, the first session of which was held on Jan. 7, was requested by Cosby who was dismissed by school superintendent Jim Cherry shortly before Christmas. He had been at the school since 1953. Principal Coleman came to the school last August to fill the vacancy created when L. A. Robinson resigned.

Coleman was put on the witness stand at about 10 A.M. by Murphy Cannon, attorney for the school board. He testified that Cosby reported to work late, failed to carry out assignments and was negligent.

He said he could not testify that Cosby was absent from faculty and PTA meetings as was stated in a letter of charges written by Cherry.

A crucial point in the hearing was whether or not Cosby left a faculty meeting on Oct. 8, 1957, with the consent of the principal. Coleman insisted that he walked out about 45 minutes before the meeting was adjourned. He said Cosby had previously informed him of an urgent matter he had to attend but that he advised him to make other arrangements.

Cosby, however, testified the principal gave him permission to leave by saying "if you have to go, you have to go."

On Oct. 9, or Oct. 10, Cosby was reportedly suspended by Coleman but was later allowed to return to his duties after a conference between him, Coleman and S. A. Moss, assistant school superintendent.

Mrs. Narvie Harris, instructional supervisor for DeKalb County Negro schools, testified that Cosby was not faithful in carrying out his program of instruction and that his classroom discipline was "from fair to poor on many occasions." Under cross examination by W. Harvey Armistead, Cosby's attorney, she said the equipment in the science class which Cosby taught, did not meet minimum standards set up by the state.

Cosby was put on the stand at about 2:30 P.M. after superintendent Cherry testified the former science teacher tried to secure the principalship at Lynwood Park school, and after Atty. Cannon rested his case.

Cosby made a sweeping indictment of conditions at the school and of the principal. He denied all of the charges and gave conflicting testimony concerning the date of his alleged suspension. He said he was never aware that he was suspended or placed under probation as averred by Coleman and Cherry.

Cosby, who stated he had been in the teaching profession about 16 years, also denied that he had been notified of any teaching faults. In answer to a charge made by Mrs. Harris who said he did not follow prescribed methods, Cosby explained his philosophy was "hang the method, the result is what counts."

Asked why he went outside administrative channels to get the Lynwood principalship, Cosby said "I was afraid something would happen as it is happening now." He testified that the community was "divided" when Robinson resigned and that he was asked to seek the helm of the school.

Atty Cannon contended that Cosby was insubordinate because he resented Coleman being named principal instead of him. Cosby countered by alleging that Coleman considered him a threat to his security as principal.

Following the six-hour hearing, board chairman Charlie Davison instructed the attorneys to present written summations to the board by February 15. He said the board probably will not rule on the case until March 4, a regularly scheduled meeting date.

School Board Raises Teachers, Receives $3,000 From Frontiers

A recommendation by the Finance Committee granting teachers, principals and other professional personnel of the Atlanta Board of Education an $11 per month salary increase, retroactive to September 1, was unanimously approved by the Atlanta Board of Education Monday night.

The report of the Finance Committee was made by chairman L. J. O'Callaghan. This increase gives the professional personnel an addition of $132 per year and the starting salary for new teachers is now $303 per month.

The Finance Committee also recommended a one-step increase for non professional personnel at the top level, including clerks and nurses.

$3,000 CHECK FROM FRONTIERS PRESENTED

A certified check for $3,000 was formally presented to the school Board from the Atlanta Chapter. Frontiers' of America. The presentation was made by Jesse O Thomas, president, who expressed the gratitude of the Frontiers to the members of the Board and Administration for cooperation in the sponsorship of the State-Wide Coaching Clinic and the East-West All-Star grid classic.

The check was received by President Latimer and was given to Mrs. Clifford N. Ragsdale, an official of the Ira Jarrell Milk Fund.

ENROLLMENT 98,000

In her monthly report to the Board, Dr. Jarrell said the total enrollment as of last Friday was 98,000, which is an increase over last year.

She also discussed double-sessions and pointed to the "trouble-spots" in enrollment, particularly in schools in urban renewal areas.

Superintendent Jarrell recommended that the examinations for new teachers be given in the fall instead of the spring and the Board approved this recommendation.

The GTEA in its annual session last week in Columbus, Ga., timed itself with the importance of an advancing air age; this was fine and in keeping with an all-out workable educational program.

Daily World p.6

The Resolution Committee brought out many highlights relative to the timing of our educational program with the air age; stated that unless we can match the "Soviet skills in our areas, our national existence will be thrown into jeopardy."

Tue, 4-15-58

It was also tressed, and rightly so, that more importance should be attached to increased emphasis on mathematics and the languages. It called for more scholarship aid and the strict enforcement of compulsory attendance laws and the establishment of facilities for Negro mentally retarded children. The call for more workshops and those auxiliaries meant for the finding of those individuals of manual aptitudes was also introduced in the resolutions.

Atlanta, Ga.

The GTEA has come a long way up the road of educational and civic progress. Despite the obstacles hurled in the path of many of the leading spirtis comprising the advisory personnel, the teachers have not been without effective leadership.

Under curriculum, let it be strictly emphasized that a course in Negro history should be compulsory in every school program. That segments of citizens that have come across the level of citizenship with loyal and wholesome contributions should not be left out of the school program agenda.

Let the teachers make the most of the ringing address of retiring President Tate who proved an effective steward in the line of duty. His ringing challenge against the "great fear over Negro teachers of the state" should not be without that vigorous activation on the part of teachers to repel such tactics.

That Atlanta should be studied as a convention headquarters in the future also was timely. From our capital city generates the state's educational activities and it is the seat of the leading learning institutions of the land for our folk.

We hail this action by our teachers and predict that the association will come into the realization of an even more effective educational program for our children.

STATESBORO PRINCIPAL NEW "VEEP"

By MARION E. JACKSON

COLUMBUS — John W. Lawton, 42-year-old graduate of Savannah State College and Columbia University polled 202 votes Friday to win the vice-president election of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association.

Mr. Lawton, a native of Statesboro, where he is principal of Willow Hill High School, will succeed President Charles L. Butler of Augusta in 1960.

The new vice-president was elected after a four man race which saw delegates split in the first balloting. The voting in the first gave him 202 votes, against 88 for Robert Threatt, Columbus, and Robert A. Bryant, Cedartown.

FINAL BALLOTING

In the final balloting Friday Lawton was elected by a 209 majority. Threatt received 108 votes and Bryant [illegible].

Sat 4-12-58

Charles L. Butler, in-coming president announced the election of Mr. Lawton at the morning session. His elevation to the second highest post in the GTEA organization was hailed by a cheering audience. The new vice president apparently had the enthusiastic support of the rank and file of the GTEA.

FEAR SINCE 1954

Retiring president H. E Tate in his final address told the GTEA "since 1954, there has been a great fear cast over the Negro teachers of our state. On many occasions, they have been told that if the law of the land is upheld and activated that they would lose their jobs. They have been told that if they didn't sign a loyalty oath designed to circumvent the law that they would be fired. They have been told that they must not be a member of the NAACP, if they are to maintain their jobs and might be dismissed if they believed in the law as interpreted by the highest official body of our time.

"I am sure that there have been many variations of these threats, and all of these reprisal weapons have been used to instill fear and strengthen the bulwarks of a cause that is all ready is lost."

ON DISBELIEF

"When I am told that I should not believe in the ruling of the highest court of the land and should not be a member of the NAACP I am being told in essence that I should not believe in George Washington, the first President of our land who visualized America as a country where all individuals would be free, where no person because of declared authority would be superior to his peers. I am in essence told that I should not believe in the work of Thurgood Marshall, who has argued for the citizenship rights for all people, when I am told that I should not believe in the ruling of the highest judicial body in the land.

"I am in essence being told that I should not agree with the Declaration of Independence or with the endowment of man's creator that he is entitled to certain inalienable rights, some being life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, when I am told that I should not be a member or support the NAACP.

IT WOULD BE MOCKERY

"It would be a mockery on the work which Walter White dedicated his life, and a distorted belief that the equalization of Georgia teachers' salaries was a great injustice, that Autherine Lucy be she walked through the campus of the University of Alabama trembling yet fearless, tonight for a useless cause.

"If I am to believe that the highest judicial body in our land is only a creator of strife and cannot be trusted, then I must also believe that Abraham Lincoln, Mary McLeod Bethune, Benjamin Franklin, Christoper Columbus, Charles L. Harper, Patrick Henry and others were also creators of strife and animosity and could not be trusted."

Mr. Tate insisted "this I would never believe. The lost of education and of educators will be improved in proportion to the number of fearless people who are in our classrooms, in our offices, in the county courthouses, in the state department of education and in our state association."

Earlier the GTEA had heard greetings from Dr. Claude Purcell, State Superintendent of Education and Dr. R. L. Cousins, Director, Division of Negro Education.

Dr. Lynette Saine, Atlanta University, Chairman of the Goals and Objectives Committee, was the final speaker of the morning session.

The number of delegates, representing Negro schools from throughout the state, is expected to swell to more than 4,000 before the three-day convention closes Friday.

Wednesday night's meeting, held at Spencer High auditorium, was highlighted by acceptance speeches of four educators nominated for the office of vice president of the association.

Nominated for the post are Robert Threatt, Columbus teacher; Robert A. Bryant, principal of Carver Hill High School, Cedartown; Daniel T. Grant, principal of Washington Consolidated School, Cairo, and John W. Lawton, principal of Willow Hill Elementary School, Statesboro.

Election of the vice president, who will automatically move into the presidency two years from now, will take place Thursday.

H. E. Tate, Griffin, outgoing president of the association, gave the president's annual report Wednesday night, outlining the expansion of the organization in membership, program and service during the last year.

Integration Of Louisville, Ky. Teachers Coming

By NAT KILLMAN

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — (NNPA) — According to four members of the Board of Education here, integration of colored and white teachers in Louisville will eventually come.

The members of the board who concurred in this belief are Morton Walker, Fred C. Burdorf, Yancy Alsheler and Dann C. Byck.

The fifth member, L. Eugene Johnson, was unavailable for comment due to absence from the city.

The NNPA decided to get the view points of these leaders in education after Superintendent Carmichael described them as men with "fineness of feeling and courage."

NATURAL PROCESS

As president of the board when it voted to desegregate several years ago, Walker indicated that he saw integration as a natural process as facilities adjust.

He expressed opposition to any arbitrary teacher desegregation. Asked when teacher desegregation would take place, Walker said in about 10 years.

Burdorf also sees teacher integration but not in the near future. He pointed out that the board would take Carmichael's recommendation as to when to begin. He said "It will not help to push it."

Alsheler, oldest member in point of board service, thinks that teacher integration. He stated that the board has not formulated a plan and that he doesn't think it is the duty of the board to do so.

Dann C. Byck, president of the board, believes that teacher integration is "bound to come," but thinks that it is best that we "digest on meal (pupil integration) before we begin another."

How to Deduct From Income Tax

Good News for All Teachers!

NEW ORLEANS—Thousands of school teachers throughout the nation were able this year to deduct millions of dollars in expenses incurred in obtaining further education. This valuable income tax item was made possible by Mrs. Lillie Mae D. Green, a New Orleans public school teacher.

MRS. LILLIE M. GREEN
. . . she showed the way

Mrs. Green and her husband, Robert S. Green, filed and won a suit against the U. S. Treasury Department. Their suit pointed out that while attending Columbia University in 1952, Mrs. Green spent a total of $1,025.25 for tuition, room and board, and railroad fare.

As a result new Federal regulations are in effect allowing all educators to deduct such expenses from income tax.

Attys. Rupert A. Sturdy and A. D. Freeman Jr. for the petitioners pointed out that effective in 1947 in order to qualify for annual increments or to retain increments, teachers were required by the Orleans Parish School Board to obtain three "credits" during each five-year period.

During the five-year period after the provision went into effect Mrs. Green attended Columbia University in order to comply. Since she was a primary grade teacher, Mrs. Green took courses aimed at bringing her up to date on the teaching of small children, such as courses in improving their reading ability.

Her testimony was to the effect that she had not been promoted as a result of the courses, nor was she ever an applicant for a higher position.

In the past teachers were allowed to deduct expenses only when further education was specifically required to hold a position. The new regulations put teachers on the same basis as self-employed persons as doctors, dentists, engineers and others who have been allowed to deduct expenses for further education.

Teachers who qualified under the 1954 tax code were allowed to file amended returns as far back as the calendar year 1954.

Negro Teacher Loses Bias Suit Against County

BALTIMORE, Sept. 16 (AP) Federal Judge Roszel C. Thomsen today denied a request for damages and back salary to a Negro teacher who claimed Prince Georges County school officials discriminated against her because of her race.

Judge Thomsen held that any discrimination, as charged by Delitha A. West of Brandywine, occurred before 1940 and the suit was barred by the statute of limitations.

Mrs. West was principal of the Cedarville Elementary school, with 36 years teaching experience. She contended that the county school officials refused her a first-class rating because of her race until 1949.

Before being declared unconstitutional in 1949, a separate, lower salary scale for Negro teachers was used by the county. The law was amended and now all Negro teachers in the county with at least one year of experience are rated first class.

Mrs. West was rated second class from 1940 to 1949. Judge Thomsen ruled, because she did not meet first class requirements.

He said that if she thought county school officials erred between 1940 and 1948 she should have appealed to the State Board of Education.

The Judge noted there "is no evidence of any present discrimination against Negro teachers in Prince Georges County."

Mrs. West asked $15,600 back salary, $50,000 for mental pain and suffering and $100,000 for punitive damaages.

Negro Says School Pay Is Unequal

BALTIMORE, Sept. 9 (AP).—A Negro school principal who is suing Prince Georges County school officials for $165,000 testified yesterday they refused to give her a first-class rating and a salary to match.

Mrs. Delitha A. West's suit charges that the county pays Negro teachers and principals less than white educators with the same experience and qualifications.

Mrs. West, who has 36 years teaching experience, is principal of Cedarville Elementary School. She lives at Brooklyn, Md.

Her Federal court suit asks $15,600 in back salary, $50,000 for mental pain and $100,000 punitive damages. She also asks an injunction against discrimination.

The suit is against the county's board of education and school superintendent.

Mrs. West told Judge Roszel C. Thomsen she had complained at various times in the 1940s but still was denied the first-class rating and was kept at second class.

Judge Thomsen said his opinion would be filed after attorneys have filed briefs with him.

MISSISSIPPI VOTES TEACHER PAY RISE

Public Education Will Get 43% of Total Budget in Next Two Years

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., May 3—Mississippi's public education system—often criticized as the poorest in the nation—will get nearly $98,000,000, or 43 per cent of the state's total budget in the next two years.

The state's 17,500 school teachers will share in one of the most sizable salary increases ever voted for teachers in Mississippi.

The Legislature, which ended a four-month-old session April 30, appropriated a total two-year budget of $228,000,000, or about $3,400,000 more than estimated tax revenue.

Financial leaders, however, say the apparent "deficit" spending will not be dangerous if the economy remains solvent.

The improved teacher salary scale—an absolute must if Mississippi is to keep its best trained teachers at home—offers an increase of as much as $675 a year for a teacher with a master's degree.

The new law, already signed by Gov. J. P. Coleman, also provides for a nine-month school term throughout Mississippi on an optional basis with the local districts.

Takes Effect July 1

The salary schedule, which takes efect July 1, was outlined by State Superintendent of Education J. M. Tubb.

Increases are based on the type of teacher certificate held by the individual teacher.

The schedule is as follows:

Certificate	Present Pay	New Pay
AA (Master's)	$2,200	$2,875
A (Bachelor's)	2,000	2,650
B (3 college years)	1,800	1,900
C (2 college years)	1,400	1,600
D (1 college year)	1,200	1,300
E (H. S. graduate)	700	800

In addition, teachers get $80 a year for teaching experience up to a maximum of five years, as a supplement to base pay.

Moreover, the law provides $245 a teacher unit for supplies, teacher training aids, chalk, office equipment and related items.

The law pegs at $22,000,000 the amount of the cost to be borne by local school districts, leaving the rest for the state to pay.

Benefits to Industry

Other major accomplishments of the 1958 session include:

¶State ownership of Gulf Coast ports of Pascagoula and Gulfport. Deep harbor and shipping facilities will be built under direction of the Mississippi Agricultural and Industrial Board.

¶Creation of the Pearl River Reservoir Project to provide long-range industrial water supply for central Mississippi. The project will cost $25,000,000 and will result in construction of a 37,000-acre lake in five central counties—offering unusual benefits to industry, farming and recreation.

For the first time the Legislature levied a sales tax on Rural Electrification Associations to pay the teacher salary increases.

The Legislature failed in several important fields, particularly re-apportionment. Several attempts to re-apportion the Legislature were bogged down in House-Senate conferences, leaving the 1890 apportionment intact.

Population shifts since the 1890 constitution have left North Mississippi over-represented and South Mississippi sorely under-represented.

Attorney General Is Doubtful They'd Give Up Pay Roll

SPEAKS AT GREENWOOD

Special to The Commercial Appeal

GREENWOOD, Miss., Oct. 16 — Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson told the Greenwood Kiwanis Club Thursday that he does not believe Negro school teachers in Mississippi will let agitators make them forfeit an annual pay roll of more than 18 million dollars.

"They would be the first losers," he said.

Mr. Patterson brought out the fact that Illinois and New York conbined do not have as many Negro teachers as Mississippi.

7,217 Negro Teachers

"There are 7,217 Negro school teachers in Mississippi," said Mr. Patterson, "with an average salary of $2,150 per year for grade teachers and $2,570 for high school teachers and $3,837 for principals."

The total in salaries per year, other than junior and senior college teacher's salaries, is $16,780,607.

The Negroes are the chief beneficiaries in the present school building program, the speaker pointed out, although 85 per cent of the program is being paid for by the white citizens of Mississippi.

Tells Of School Growth

Citing the growth of Mississippi's school program, Mr. Patterson said that in 1946 the appropriation for common schools was 23 million, in 1956 it was 78 million and in 1958 the appropriation is 100 million.

"In the public welfare program of the state the Negroes are again the chief beneficiaries," said Mr. Patterson. In the public assistance program of the state 39.60 per cent of those receiving aid are white and 60.16 Negro.

In the program of aid for dependent children 29 per cent of the caseload is white and 70.34 per cent Negro, even though the Negro population of Mississippi is only 45 per cent of the total.

The attorney-general reported ly indicated that 85% of the 2 million dollar payroll for Negr teachers is paid for by whit taxpayers.

Actually, Negroes constitut 45% of the state's population and they have an equivalent pro portion of the tax

The attorney general's indi cations are apparently for the purpose of creating an inferior complex in the Negroes of this state," Evers said referring to the attorney-general's statistical report.

Court Rules In Favor Of Seven Negro Teachers

CINCINNATI — The Ohio Supreme Court ordered that seven Negro teachers of the Lockland school system be restored to status as high school teachers with full assignments.

The high court, acting on a petition for writ of mandamus, gave the Lockland School Board until Nov. 8 either to give the seven high school duties or show cause why this cannot be done.

Educator Says Integration Cost 300 Jobs in Oklahoma

DALLAS, April 4 (AP)—The integration of Oklahoma schools has cost 300 Negro teachers their jobs, a social scientist said today.

"The integration of Negro students has not posed a difficult problem but the integration of Negro teachers is proving more difficult," Dr. Virgil F. Dougherty of Oklahoma City University told the annual convention of the Southwestern Social Science Association.

"Before integration there were 1,531 Negro teachers in Oklahoma, whereas there are approximately 1,200 left," Dr. Dougherty said. He has carried out research on integration.

City Teachers Will Get $100 Annual Raise

All Oklahoma City teachers will get a $100 raise in their annual salaries next year, plus the regular $100 increment given for each additional year of experience in the city system.

The raise boosts the minimum salary to $3,400 for beginning teachers with a bachelor's degree —$400 above the guaranteed minimum over the state.

The wage boost applies to all levels of the city teacher salary schedule, meaning an instructor with the maximum 18 years of increment payments can receive up to $5,200 annually if he has a bachelor's degree ,or $5,400 with a master's degree.

Fate of OAT To Be Decided At '58 Meeting

The Oklahoma Association of Teachers, the former Oklahoma Association of Negro Teachers, will convene in its annual business session beginning at 9:30 a. m. Saturday, October 25, at Douglass high school. The Saturday meeting was scheduled at the October 11 meeting of the association's executive committee.

Paramount in the agenda will be the decision as to the future of the OAT which will be decided in the morning business session and reports from F. D. Moon of the city, executive secretary of the association; L. W. Elliott of Enid, treasurer; Miss Ella L. Clement of the city, recording secretary; and H. F. V. Wilson of Ardmore, executive committee chairman.

Among the numerous suggestions made relative to the organization are continuing the organization in a stand-by position to be used as the need arises, disbanding the association and earmarking remaining funds for a student loan fund, and disbandment with funds being contributed to the NAACP or some other worthwhile organization.

To Earmark Funds

Also comprising the agenda will be reports from presidents of the six district organizations on plans for the disposition of funds still remaining in the local treasuries and an explanation of the essential features of the National Defense Act.

The annual social sponsored by the association will not be held this year since the Langston Alumni chapter of Oklahoma City will sponsor a breakfast social from 5:30 to 8:30 a. m. Friday, and the local chapter of Delta Sigma Theta sorority will be hostess to a dance the same night at Blossom Heath.

NEGRO TEACHERS LOSE JOBS IN OKLAHOMA INTEGRATION

14m(4)

DALLAS (AP)—Integration of Oklahoma schools has cost 300 Negro teachers their jobs, a social scientist said Friday.

"The integration of Negro students has not posed a difficult problem, but the integration of Negro teachers is proving more difficult," Dr. Virgil F. Dougherty of Oklahoma City University told the Southwestern Social Science Assn. annual convention.

"Before integration there were 1,537 Negro teachers in Oklahoma whereas there are approximately 1,200 left," Dr. Dougherty, who carried out research on integration, said.

Hit Hard In Texas, Oklahoma

300 Lose Jobs In Oklahoma. No Remedy In Sight

DALLAS, Texas. —(ANP)— Integration of schools in Oklahoma and Texas has brought a knotty problem—what to do with the Negro teachers?

In Oklahoma, 300 Negro teachers have lost their jobs as a result of school integration. This information was imparted by Dr. Virgil F. Dougherty of Oklahoma City university, at the annual convention of the Southwestern Social Science association last week.

Dr. Dougherty said: "Integration of Negro students has not posed a difficult problem, but the integration of Negro teachers is proving more difficult.

"Before integration, there were 1,537 Negro teachers in Oklahoma, whereas there are now approximately 1,200."

"Integration Inevitable"

In Corpus Christi, Texas, 11 candidates for school board posts aired their views on Negro teachers integration. All agreed that integration of these teachers into the school system "is inevitable," but said much study and careful planning needs be applied before it will happen.

Meanwhile in Washington, Congress was urged to put "firm anti-integration safeguards" in any school bills it contemplates in the future.

The request was made by Clarence Mitchell, Washington NAACP chapter director, before the house education subcommittee, currently considering various bills for college scholarships and grants to states to trengthen science and mathematic training in public schools.

Mitchell said no state should receive federal education aid unless its officials pledged that funds be spent in accordance with the Supreme court decision outlawing school segregation.

He disagreed with the view of Rep. George S. McGovern (D., S.D.) that such a pledge would "kill any chance of passing any school legislature this year."

Integration In Arizona

A visitor at the annual meeting of the social science group's annual meeting in Dallas recalled the situation in Phoenix, Arizona, after the schools there were integrated, and harmony prevailed in all school districts in the "Valley of the Sun."

It was pointed out that Negro teachers, as well as students, have been integrated into the Phoenix school system and have been made welcome by principals, fellow instructors and officials of the board of education.

While the Negro population in the Resort City is compartively small — Indians, Mexicans and other nationals being present in large numbers — acceptance of the Negro teachers followed closely on the heels of admission of Negro students in elementary and high schools.

Negro athletes have also distinguished themselves at the Arizona state colleges. Observers stated that what has happened on a small scale in Arizona will eventually be the pattern for the state of Oklahoma.

New US Tax Ruling Saves Millions For Teachers

RICHMOND, Va.—A new ruling by the U. S. Department of Treasury announced recently will save teachers approximately twenty million dollars. Dr. J. Rupert Picott, executive secretary, Virginia Teachers Association, and Mrs. Ellen G. Johnson, NEA field representative declared the new treasury regulation "the most significant step ever taken by the United States government to improve the economic status of teachers and their professional qualifications."

U. S. Treasury regulation T. D. 6291 liberalized the deductability of educational expenses of teachers from income subject to federal income taxes. The new regulation appears in the Federal Register for April 5, 1958. Teachers can now deduct from their taxable income expenses incurred voluntarily for further education. Teachers could previously only deduct from their taxable income expenses for education required by their school boards.

DR. PICOTT stated that under the regulations, expenditures for education are deductible if undertaken "primarily for the purpose" of (1) maintaining or improving skills required by a taxpayer in his employment or other trade or business, or (2) meeting the express resuirements of the taxpayers' employer (or applicable law) imposed as a condition to the retention by the taxpayer or his salary, status, or employment.

The regulations also provide that if it is customary for other established members of the taxpayer's trade or business to undertake education of the type referred to in (1) above, the taxpayer will ordinarily be considered to have undertaken this education for the required purposes. This will, of course, be of assistance to teachers.

THE NEW Treasury regulation is retroactive to 1954, but amended returns must be filed within four years of the tax year under consideration. That is, teachers wishing to file amended returns for 1955 must do so by April 15, 1959, for 1956 by April 15, 1960, for 1957 by April 15, 1961 and so on. April 15 was the deadline for filing amended returns for 1954.

Under the new Internal Revenue Service rule, academic expenses are deductible even though the course is not required and many qualify a person for promotion or higher salary. Deductible expenses include tuition and, in the case of courses taken away from home, travel, meals and lodging also are included, Dr. Picott reported.

TAXPAYERS will need Form 1040 for the year (s) in question and a Form 843 for each year. This applies whether or not you have filed the short form (1040-A) or the long form (1040) in preparing your income tax return, the VTA secretary held.

Understand the new regulations. Do not try to deduct any expense not allowed as a deduction. If part of educational expenses have been deducted in some year 1954-57 and the taxpayer is now entitled to deduct a larger amount, be careful not be deduct the same expenses twice. Do not make any deductions for which there are not records, except possibly transportation. Claiming a refund on an amended return may open the door to audit of taxpayer's entire return. One could, therefore, win on the issue of educational expenses but be assessed a deficiency on some other items.

Unemployed Teacher Suing for $50,000!

BECKLEY, W. Va. — A complaint, formally charging the Mongo County Board of Education with racial discrimination against a Negro teacher, has been filed before the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of West Virginia.

The action involves Anna Starling, plaintiff, and lists as defendants the Board of Education, W. T. Floyd, superintendent of schools, Williamson, W. Va.; J. B. Fissack, William M. Adair, Tom R. Varney, C. J. Hamilton and B. J. Webb.

Magazine Editor Foresees Brighter Future For South

TUSKEGEE — "The future for the South looks even better than was realized a few short years ago," Alexander Nunn, editor of the Progressive Farmer, told some 60 attendants of the Professional Agricultural Workers Conference Monday at Tuskegee Institute.

Nunn said, "We have gone from a primarily rural economy to one in which more people live in communities of 2,500 or more than in open country and smaller towns." He said this trend had come about in the years between 1930 and 1955.

The speaker referred to the South's share in the national income and said, "In the last 30 years it has risen from 18 to 23 per cent."

The big factor, according to the editor, has been one phenomenal industrial upsurge throughout the South. "A big help in stabilizing rural economy has been that nearly 60 per cent of the newer industries have gone either to the open country or the smaller towns," Nunn explained.

"A survey of the whole picture is toward greater industrialization, farm mechanization, more farm owners, fewer tenants, and a general rise in education and personal and family incomes," he said. Increases in population will bring better markets for farm produce, he said.

The second speaker was Robert C. Morton, representative of a leading producer of feeds and supplies for livestock farming. He discussed a growing system in agriculture known as "integration and contract farming."

Morton pointed out that integration has established itself as an important force in agriculture. He urged his audience to keep in mind the vertical integration is not a moral or legal issue, but an economic problem. He said its merits will be measured in terms of economic advantages that it may bring to all parties concerned.

The speaker referred to a growing type of relationship involving the consumer, retailer, processor, supplier and the farmer alike in a system of operation that continuously lowers per-unit costs.

VOLUME V NO. 17

AS OTHERS SEE US:

Brevard Stephenson, staff writer for the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette's Daily Magazine Section, on September 10, wrote an illuminating article regarding his visit to Tuskegee Institute during the past summer. We quote,below, excerpts from his column entitled:

IMPRESSION OF TUSKEGEE

"Among the places my wife and I visited in Alabama during early summer was a community with a history, a present and a future--it was here we strolled on ground formerly trod by Booker T. Washington and George Washington Carver.

"Trees and grass make a serene and scholarly setting for impressive and well kept buildings. We were shown into an excellent museum named for Carver and devoted largely, though by no means altogether, to this great and gentle scientist and his work, but I shall not take space to tell you about this now.

"I'm taking you to the monument of the founder of Tuskegee Institute. No frozen placid sculpture this. It flows with vitality and action. There are two figures of heroic size: Booker T. Washington lifting a sort of cloak from a symbolic Negro worker. It is best described in these words at the front of the base:

"He lifted the veil of ignorance from his people and pointed the way to progress through education and industry." If you think it pertinent (I do) I can add that the sculptor was Charles Keck, and the casting was by the Roman Bronze Works of New York.

"As we move around the sculpture we see other inscriptions. These are excerpts from the words of Booker T. Washington. One of these reads: "We shall prosper as we learn to dignify and glorify labor and put brains and skill into the common occupations of life."

"Another: "There is no defense or security for any of us except in the highest intelligence and development of all."

"And this one: "I will let no man drag me down so low as to make me hate him.".

"Tuskegee Institute is a place where serious young men and women improve their minds and skills amid beautiful and relaxing surroundings. I gained the impression from my visit that the students at Tuskegee Institute were bent on making the most of their opportunity to learn something. It could be a real lesson in the meaning of education. . . .

"It is impossible to associate the Institute, unless by way of contrast, with ideas of hoodlumism, sadistic hazing, social cliques or monkeyshines.

"This little piece is no sociological document--but I came away with an impression that the young people at Tuskegee Institute were the best mannered students that I had ever seen."

30 Doctors Visit Labs At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE — A group of 30 physicians from the United States and 12 foreign countries visited Tuskegee Institute last week. The group came from the Virus and Rickettsia Section, Communicable Disease Center, U.S. Public Health Service, Montgomery.

Under the direction of Dr. Maurice Scheaffer they are attending a short course in the principles and laboratory methods in diagnosis of virus and rickettsia diseases, and a workshop on public health problems relating to the diagnosis of poliomyelitis and the isolation of polio virus in cases of poliomyelitis.

The principles and labortory methods course began Oct. 5 and will be followed by the workshop, part of which will be given at the Communicable Disease Center Laboratory in Montgomery and the Communicable Disease Center Laboratory at Chamblee, Ga., continuing until Nov. 7.

The group is composed of personnel from the State Public Health Laboratories in the United States and Hawaii, and similar personnel from several foreign countries. The personnel from the foreign countries are in the United States under the sponsorship of the World Health Organization International Polio Course.

The foreign countries represented are Chile, Lebanon, Nigeria, Egypt, Poland, French Equatorial Africa, Austria, Soviet Union New Guinea, Jamaica, West Indies and Venezuela.

Primary purpose of bringing the group to Tuskegee Institute was to visit the Carver Fondation's laboratories to observe the work being done in mammalian cell and tissue culture as a part of the principles and laboratory methods course.

The Carver Foundation laboratory is operating a mammalian cell depository under the sponsorship of the National Cancer Institute of the National Institutes of Health. In addition, work is being done on the growth requirements of mammalian cells and the susceptibility of various cell strains to polio and other similar viruses.

Alabama Educational Group Enjoys Tour

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —For the fourth consecutive year the Alabama Educational Group tour has been sponsored by Andres Ruben Alba of Tuskegee Institute. This summer the group toured Western U.S., covering 17 states, including Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, California, Oregon, Washington, Kansas, and Oklahoma.

Andres Ruben Alba, coach at Tuskegee Institute High School, has sponsored tours to Cuba and Mexico for the past four years. This unique summer travel idea was originated by Mr. Alba four years ago in an effort to provide an inexpensive avenue for summer adventure and education. Twenty-five persons enjoyed this spectacular event.

Youths study voter laws in Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Sixteen youths, on vacation from college, took time out to become acquainted with the Alabama voter registration laws during the month of August.

While the young people themselves provided the initiative, the Voter Franchise Committee of the Tuskegee Civic Association made available its personnel, facilities and materials in order that these youths may become better informed to their civic duties and responsibilities.

The Zeta Sigma Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority assisted the Voters Franchise Committee in counseling these youths.

The public is invited.

HOSPITAL STAGES OPEN HOUSE

The Veterans Administration Hospital, Tuskegee, Alabama, will throw open its doors to the public on Monday afternoon, November 10th from 1:00 to 4:00 p. m., according to Dr. Prince P. Barker, manager of that installation.

Tuskegee Institute Gets $230,000 Science Grant

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—The National Science Foundation has awarded Tuskegee Institute a grant in excess of $230,800 in support of an Academic-year Institute designed to help high school science and mathematics teachers improve their subject matter knowledge. At total of 32 colleges and universities will share a sum of over $8,600,000 in this program slated to reach 1500 teachers of science and mathematics.

For the past two years the National Science Foundation has sponsored Summer Institutes at Tuskegee, and 107 other colleges and universities. Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute, stated that the experience of conducting these two Summer Institutes will contribute much to the planning and operation of this newer and bigger program of the National Science Foundation.

Dr. W. Edward Belton of the Department of Chemistry at Tuskegee, who directed the Summer Institutes, will be responsible for carrying out the general provisions of the foundation's proposal in the new program.

Each of the 32 colleges selected will enroll approximately 50 teachers in programs covering periods of from nine to 10 months. Provisions in the grant make it possible for in-service teachers to receive stipends, allowances and travel to off set loss of current salaries. The program will begin with the 1959-60 academic year.

The Academic-year Institutes program is being expanded by the Foundation because of its success in helping science and mathematics teachers improve the quality of their own teaching through enabling them to keep abreast of the latest scientific developments. The influence of these teachers on others with whom they come in contact is such that it raises the general level of science instruction in the secondary schools and also provides motivation for students to undertake science careers.

Tuskegee Institute is one of 25 institutions which will sponsor general programs in both science and mathematics. The other seven will concern themselves with mathematics only. Both Tuskegee institute and Atlanta University, another institution to share in the program, are member institutions in the United Negro College Fund, an educational chest-fund for 33 privately supported institutions.

Tuskegee gets science grant

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — The National Science Foundation has awarded Tuskegee Institute $230,800 for an academic institute to help high school science and mathematics teachers.

Dr. W. Edward Belton of the department of chemistry, who directed science and mathematics summer institutes at Tuskegee for two years, will head the new program which gets under way next fall.

Unlike the past two years, the institute will cover periods of 9 to 10 months.

Some 32 colleges and universities will share a total of $8,600,000 in this program slated to reach 1,500 teachers. Each of the colleges will enroll approximately 50 teachers.

Tuskegee Commemorates Founding; Jones Speaks

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Tuskegee Institute's Educational Opportunity in a Changing Social Order," was the topic chosen by Dr. Lewis W. Jones, Associate Director, Rural Life Council, for the Annual July 4th Observance of the Founding of Tuskegee Institute.

He said, Tuskegee Institute has a future and the opportunity to make it as great or as limited as the man, Booker T. Washington, would have made it.' He described the Founder as a supreme opportunist, wisely calculating the best approach to situations as they arose.

Dr. Jones said that a misspent opportunity may be lost forever. "In this changing social order," he warned, "Tuskegee must expect to do things that it has never done before." He reasoned that Booker T. Washington would not expect that we follow the pattern of 1891.

TASK OF INSTITUTION

"Decision for the welfare of everyone is the task of an educational institution, and going back to the old pattern is no panacea for anything," Dr. Jones stated. He said that Tuskegee faces such a decision to push forward its opportunities in research, teaching and in community service.

In research he urged that the job ahead is seeking and finding new knowledge—"Research in the natural sciences above and beyond George Washington Carver—in the social sciences beyond Monroe N. Work."

In the area of teaching he said that a teacher should be able to bring the text book up-to-date. "Teaching is the business of a college, and students can distinguish between a good and a poor teacher," he stated. "In our teaching," he said, "we must not bypass the new fields."

WASHINGTON MASTERY PRAISED

He praised Dr. Washington's mastery in the technique of human relations. He reminded his audience that they are living and studying in a community that the world has in focus. If we can have competent creative imagination and the drive to work for the common good, this community might well live up to the high level of its expectations.

Dr. Jones said, "We can have a history if we stay mediocre, but we cannot have a future."

The services were held at historic Butler Chapel A. M .E. Zion Church where Booker T. Washington opened school with thirty underprivileged students of varying ages on July 4, 1881.

Memorial Picnic Scheduled Friday Near Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE — The third annual picnic celebrating the beginning of Booker T. Washington's program of Industrial Education and Racial Understanding will be held 4½ miles east of Tuskegee on the Atlanta Highway, Friday, according to Sidney J. Phillips, president o the Booker T. Washington Goodwill Building Commission.

He stated that the Alabama Highway Department has completed pavement of the driveway and parking areas at the site of the replica of the restored Virginia birth cabin of the noted educator.

The birth cabin which was completed some time ago now contains severa significant quotations from the pen of Booker T. Washington on the walls and in addition the plates from which the following books were written, "Working With The Hands," "My Larger Education," "The Future of The American Negro," "The Story of My Life, and Work," "The Story of The Negro," "Sewing and Reaping," and selected speeches compiled by his youngest son, Earnest Davidson Washington.

Dr. Isaac Scott Hathway and his wife who designed the Booker T. Washington and George Washington Carver memorial half-dollars have been extended an invitation to display the models from which the coins were made.

The flag-raising ceremony will be performed by the Boy Scout troops under the direction of the Scout masters.

Food serving stands for various organizations have been erected. The public is invited July 4 and 5. A two-acre parking area is being made 50 feet at the back of the roadside shrine area. Each night there was an education picture of the Life of Booker T. Washington, during the day, a recorded drama of "The Burning Bush," which was presented on the Calvalcade of America by the Du Pont Company will be presented.

Kansas U. Bacteriologist Talks At Tuskegee Inst.

Dr. David Paretsky, head of the dept. of Bacteriology at Kansas Univ., was the guest lecturer to the Tuskegee Institute Sigma Xi Club and the Division of Natural Science of Tuskegee Institute. Preceded by a dinner for the guest speaker at Dorothy Hall, the lecture was held in the amphitheater of Armstrong Hall. Dr. Paretsky's topic was, "Host-Parasite Relationships in Rickettsial Infection."

Rickettsiae are organisms which fit in the evolutionary scheme somewhere between true viruses and bacteria. They are smaller than the latter and larger than the former. Their classification in the scheme of living organisms is in doubt. They are predominantly parasitic, but some are, unlike most viruses, independent in their life cycle. Their best method of cultivation and growth in the laboratory is in the living embryos of fertile hen's eggs. Here they rob the host of some of its nutrients and metabolic products in order to live and propogate their kind.

Dr. Paretsky's major interest is in the biochemical requirements of these rickettsial organisms. He has studied extensively the systems in both the host organisms and the rickettsia itself in order to know what the demands of the latter are on the host. The ultimate goal is to be able to provide the parasitic organism itself with necessary nutrients completely separate and independent from a host. In order to understand this he has concentrated on classical reactions known to exist in cellular metabolism. These same mechanisms appear to exist in the rickettsiae in the same manner as they do in the higher organisms themselves.

Dr. Paretsky demonstrated by slides what is believed to be the first authentic instance of cellular division by binary fission of the rickettsial organism. The philosophical and evolutionary view point of how these parasites devolved from free-living, independent organisms to parasitic forms was elaborated on by the speaker.

After the formal talk, a discussion was entered into by Dr. Paretsky and members of the audience. The basis for the mechanism of life and of living organisms was developed by Dr. Paretsky during this period.

Girl Scout Leaders Travel To Eufaula

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Mrs. Clara E. Wiliams, Neighborhood Chairman, Tuskegee Institute Girl Scouts and Volunteer Training, Tallaconocko Girl Scout Council, and Mrs. Latha Harrison, Troop Leader, Troop 78, were in Eufaula last Tuesday to serve on the instructors' team for a Program Planning session with the Eufaula Girl Scout Neighborhood held at Van Buren High School.

Mrs. W. T. Kennedy, Executive Director, Tallaconocko, Cuoncil and her professional assistant, Mrs. Wesley McCurry also served on the team to help each of the five troops organized last year in Eufaula to map out a troop program calendar for the current year. Special attention was given to basic Scouting activities which emphasize the girls' understanding of the Promise and Laws as well as to plans for service projects, out-of-doors days, and international friendship.

Highlights of the meeting was an exhibit of Christmas crafts suitable for Brownies, Intermediates, and Seniors by Mrs. McCurry while the leaders took notes of special items which their troops could make.

Following this most enjoyable session the Tuskegeeans were invited to dinner by Mrs. Lena Thomas and a group of the Eufaula ladies including Mrs. I. Pearsons Mrs. Abbie Jordan, and Mrs. M Pryor.

A Philosophy On Wealth And Happiness

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — One of the most successful men that it has been my privilege to know lives by this bit of philosophy: "There is a fortune in what people throw away." There are two ways to get rich — the right way and the wrong way. Theer are, of course, alternatives to each course: the easy way and the impossible way; the common way and the rare way. The wrong way is the common way. To be rich is to try to get enough money for one's wants. The difficulty in this way is that the wants always grow faster than the money pile.

When a man buys railroads as other men buy motor cars, he may be in straitened circumstances, though he has fifty-millions in good old U. S. bonds. The more money a man has, the poorer he is if he has not learned to moderate his desires as well as to accumulate his supplies. The only way to be rich is to keep one's desires within his income. If one wants what pennies will buy and has ten cents, he is wealthy. A bright dime to a street Arab is greater wealth than a thousand dollars to a Merchant Prince

The right way to be rich is never want what you cannot buy, then you will always have as much money as you want. This is the easy way. No man can regulate the contents of his purse; every man can regulate the quality and the quantity of his desires. Capital is not within every man's attainment; contentment is. He is wealthy who has learned two arts — first, how to be contented with what he can get; second. how to use what he has.

It is always easy to have plenty of money — spend less than you earn. It is always easy to have all the money you want — want less than you have. We all grow old too soon; most everyone learns the aforesaid two arts too late. Yes, much too late. Any fool can earn; only the prudent and wise save and accumulate Perhaps, you may, or may not, agree with the philosophy just enounciated. Think it over carefully. I am of the opinion that there is more merit than demerit in it.

In a purely economic sense, too much saving is as bad for the economy as is too little saving. There must be enough savings for capital formation to take shape. The extent to which the philosophy is adopted is one of degree. Physical production that makes for a healthy economy cannot be had with miserly consumer spending. Thrift, rationally practiced, is certainly one of the main cornerstones to security and to a complete and orderly family life. The concept of thrift here used does not differ from that of thrift in the days of Franklin. Thrift can be practiced in spending as well as in saving.

STREETS REPAIRED IN GREENWOOD

The street repair going on in Greenwood is a healthy sign that Public Officials are conscious of their responsibility to all taxpayers in the County. In commenting on this it is not the purpose to praise the officials for doing that which is a duty of their office, or express thanks on behalf of the citizens that have benefitted from the performance of this service. Comment is to the effect that it the normal and right thing to do. It came about as a result of communication between citizens and officials. Other things that need to be done to restore a healthy community atmosphere, can also be done through communication if the hearts of those communicating are set on doing that which is right.

Mistakes of the past cannot be corrected by making more mistakes. Once this fact is recognized, and the channels of communication are opened to the exchange of ideas, a more normal community relationship can be had. There is no power quite as capable of restoring wholesome community relationships as the local officials and leaders of both races, working together. We can bear the hatchet or we can muddy the water still more by assuming a laissez-faire attitude. It will take prayer, debasement of pride and love of the kind the Master Teacher of men exhibited to restore a healthy and peace-will solve itself. Let not the only All that is needful atmosphere in the Tuskegeeheads of intolerance and retaliation honest communication and a desire Community. I maintain it is worthbring to this historic community termination to do that which is the price. futher dis-honor which it does not right.

Let no one be mistaken in the idea that the situation is one that deserve. The problem, complex, although can be amicably solved.

DR. FOSTER REPORTS ON PROFESSIONAL CONFERENCE

Dr. L. H. Foster spoke favorably of the proceedings and accomplishments of the Sixty-Third Annual Meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools which convened in Louisville, Kentucky on December 1-4.

Dr. Foster said, "The meetings were of a high order; Negro colleges represented were received quite graciously, and the presentations dealt with fundamental issues in education and human relations."

The conference program featured a battery of nationally eminent speakers who gave pointed estimates of the present educational situation in this country.

Nicholas DeWitt of Harvard University's Russian Research Center spoke on the subject, "The Challenge of Communist Education." Advising the group of educators not to imitate the Russians, DeWitt said, "When we justify our deeds in terms of the Soviet Challenge we demonstrate our lack of courage. The real issue is to lead or be led."

The association which is the chief accrediting agency for secondary schools and colleges in eleven southern states extended full membership to the following schools this year: Barber Scotia, Dillard University, Houston-Tillotson, Johnson C. Smith, Kentucky State, Morris Brown, Prairie View, Southern University, Spelman College, Stillman College, Tennessee A. & M. University, Texas Southern, Virginia Union University, and Xavier University.

The association was advised by one of its committees the following changes are proposed in standards for senior colleges and will be voted on at the 1959 meeting:

1. An increase in library expenditure per student from $25 to $30. Also the library must be open a minimum of 66 hours a week.
2. With reference to faculty load, 16 credit hours is the maximum with two laboratory hours being equated to one credit hour.
3. With reference to Standard III, provision should be made for assistance with classes which enroll more than 40 students. Also, there should be careful attention to the grading practices of faculty.

Nashville Editor Says U.S. Should Alter Mideast Policy

TUSKEGEE — Calling the land of civilization's beginning and the possible seedbed for its end, Creed C. Black, executive editor of the Nashville Tennessean, discussed the "explosive Middle East" at Tuskegee Institute.

The crux of the problem, Black said, is embedded in the fact that people of the Middle East, having finally escaped the stifling shadow of outside dominance extending as far back as the Turkish rule of 400 years ago and as recently as the British and French rule beginning after World War I, are seeking in the face of the disparity between the old and new, riches and poverty, to find a direction for their new freedom, one that affords them dignity and respect.

The 33-year-old editor of one of the South's best known newspapers has recently returned from an extended tour of the Middle East. While this section is plagued with problems, Black views as the most crucial the Israeli-Jordan border disputes and the United States' attempt to approach the total issue of the Middle East on a cold war basis.

He said, "We have been both suspicious and hostile toward Nasser and in doing so we have seemingly sided with the status quo; alienated Nasser's followers and made possible Russia's rising acceptance in the Middle East."

The speaker concluded that the United States has a race against time in the Middle East. Nasser is a symbol to most of this region, and they believe and follow his lead. He said America must accept neutrality on the part of these nations and the sooner the U.S. ceases sweeping such perplexing problems as the Israeli border disputes under the rug and brings them before the court of world opinion for mutual settlement, the sooner an ease of tensions can be expected in this strife-torn area.

"Some hope resides in the great respect held by these emerging countries for America's past history and its lack of colonial aspirations," the journalist said.

Founding Of Tuskegee Was Subject Of Dr. Lewis W. Jones' Address, July 4

"Tuskegee Institute's Educational Opportunity in a Changing Social Order," was the topic chosen by Dr. Lewis W. Jones, Associate Director Rural Life Council for the Annual July 4th Observance of the Founding of Tuskegee Institute.

He said, "Tuskegee Institute has a future and the opportunity to make it as great as unlimited as the man, Booker T. Washington, would have made it." He described the Founder as a supreme opportunist, wisely calculating the best approach to situations as they arose.

Dr. Jones said that a misspent opportunity may be lost forever. "In this changing social order," he warned, "Tuskegee must expect to do things that it has never done before." He reasoned that Booker T. Washington would not expect that we follow the pattern of 1891.

"Decision for the welfare of everyone is the task of an educational institution, and going back to the old pattern is no panacea for anything," Dr. Jones stated. He said that Tuskegee faces such as a decision to push forward its opportunities in research, teaching and in community service.

In research he urged that the job ahead is seeking and finding new knowledge — "Research in the naural sciences above and beyond George Washington Carver—in the social sciences beyond Monroe N. Work."

In the area of teaching he said that a teacher should be able to bring the text book up-to-date. "Teaching is the business of a college, and students can distinguish between a good and a poor teacher," he stated. "In our teaching," he said "we must not bypass the new fields."

He praised Dr. Washington's mastery in the technique of human relations. He reminded his audience that they are living and studying in a community that the world has in focus. If we can have competent creative imagination and the drive to work for the common good, this community might well live up to the high level of its expectations.

Dr. Jones said, "We can have a history if we stay mediocre, but we cannot have a future."

The services were held at historic Butler Chapel AME Zion Church where Booker T. Washington opened school with thirty underprivileged students of varying ages on July 4, 1881.

One especially pleasing number to be used by the band at some time during the football season will be a carnival of fun and it is thought this presentation will receive considerable spectator praise. It is being written by the conductor.

Montgomery And Tuskegee Groups End Western Tour

By MRS. MALLIE PETERSON

Recently a group of 20 persons from Montgomery and Tuskegee took an educational tour under the direction of Andres Ruben Alba, who for four years has conducted a vacation project, visiting such far-flung places as Cuba, Mexico, and the west.

The group toured Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Old Mexico, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, California, Oregon, Washington, Montana, Utah, Colorado, Kansas, Arkansas.

Thr tour embarked from Tuskegee to Montgomery, thence to Grambling College, Louisiana. From Grambling, the group went on to Dallas, Tex., where they visited the famed Cotton Bowl and the $8-million auditorium proud boast of Texas. They visited Carlsbad Caverns, N.M. where they ate lunch at a depth of 800-feet underground, enraptured by the mysterious grandeur of the largest known caverns in the world. Two days were spent at the La Luz Motel in El Paso Tex.

The group journeyed across the International Bridge for a day's tour of scenic places in Juarez, Mexico, shopping and dinning before returning to El Paso. The westward tour continued to Phoenix, Ariz., where the group stayed at the beautiful Frontier Motel and later visited friends and relatives in the city. In Los Angeles the group spent five days at the Lankershim Hotel visiting Disneyland, Marineland, Knox Berry Farms, Long Beach, and Beverly Hills. Some of the group went to Hollywood; others to Old Mission, San Juan, Capistrano, and Tijuana, Mexico. The Los Anges-Tuskegee Club entertained with a social at the home of the Archie R. Mosley's.

SAN FRANCISCO

Two days were spent in San Francisco where the group visited Chinatown, Fisherman's Wharf, and other scenic points. The northward journey led through giant redwood forests and on to Grant's Pass, Ore. On the way the group visited the famous treehouse, whose floor is the length and breadth of a giant tree. In Seattle, Wash., a Grey Line tour acquainted the group with the city, and a cruise on Lake Washington through Government Canal and down the Puget Sound completed a day's entertainment. A social that evening sponsored by the Seattle-Tuskegee Club completed a perfect day.

Through fruit orchards and grassy plains, the group turned east and south to Spokane. Here the proverbial red carpet was rolled out for the tourists. Following a visit to Gonzaga College the Bing Crosby Library, and coffee in the student center, the group toured the famous and unbelievably beautiful Sunker Gardens.

At 7:30 a banquet in the dining hall of the Ridpath Hotel held the group spell-bound, as they were royally entertained by the former Montgomerian, stalwart citizen of her adopted Spokane, and hostess par excellence, Mrs. Rosa D. Malone, friend of Miss Sadie Lee. Present were the mayor of Spokane and the president of the Chamber of Commerce. The entire banquet was the gift of two friends of Mrs. Malone, Mr. and Ms. Draper, president of the Gas Corporation of Spokane.

The group went through Dodge City and Virginia City, Kan., past wheat fields, snow-capped mountains, and deep canyons, to Grand Coulee Dam, Yellowstone, Wyo., where the group thrilled at the sight of boiling springs of greyish mud and Old Faithful, gushing 190 feet into the air. Here the group saw the storied brown and black bear walking around in utter freedom about the canyon grounds.

At Salt Lake City, Utah, the group went bathing in Great Salt Lake, toured the grounds of the historic Mormon Square, saw Mormon Temple, and heard in the famous Mormon Tabernacle an organ concert on one of the finest-toned organs of the world. Some also had the privilege of meeting Nat King Cole who had completed a stint in one of the night clubs the night before.

In Denver, Colo., the group spent the night at swanky Colburn Hotel before journeying on next morning high on the Rockies as they sped toward Wichita, Kan. Here the group feted the director who had a birthday on July 3. From Wichita the group went to Oklahoma City where the Oklahoma - Tuskegee Club entertained with a lawn picnic at the charming home of Mrs. R. Walker and where again there were reminiscences and reliving of old Tuskegee days.

The last night travelling was spent at the National Baptist Hotel in Hot Springs, Ark. Here the group spent a quiet Sunday and were shown through the Pythian Bath Houses. Late afternoon found the group having dinner at Arkansas State College, Pine Bluff, Ark., from which point they turned their faces homeward, tired, perhaps, but with memories to last a lifetime. They had seen barren deserts and grassy plains; snow-capped mountains and deep mysterious canyons; boiling mud springs and shooting geysers; wild animals and ranch animals; Salt Lake swims and hot spring baths; land tours and water cruises; Marineland and Disneyland; picnics, parties, restful hotels; and they had met and renewed acquaintances with a host of friendly people.

Much credit is due Andres Ruben Alba, tour director who both originated and sponsored the tour. Among the tourists were, from Montgomery, Mesdames Albertine Campbell, Mallie Foster, Evelyn Harris, Fannie Jones, Ben Moore, Patti Young; Misses Sadie C. Lee, Marie Hamilton, Ruth Washington, and Eilene Jones; from Tuskegee, A. Ruben Alba, director; Mesdames Jessie Abbott, Helen Bell, Letitia Carter, Inez Clark, Elizabeth Flake, Ruther Keyes, B. O. Morrow, Mallie C. Peterson, and Gladys Stringer.

Observe Founding Of Tuskegee In Historic Chapel

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—(ANP)— The annual observance of the founding of Tuskegee institute was held recently in Butler Chapel AME Zion church, where Booker T. Washington opened school with 30 underprivileged students of varying ages in 1881.

"Tuskegee Institute's Educational Opportunity In A Changing Social Order" was the topic chosen by Dr. Lewis W. Jones, associate director, rural life council, for the founding address.

"Tuskegee institute has a future and the opportunity to make it as great or as limited as the man, Booker T. Washington, could have made it," Dr. Jones said.

In research he urged that the job ahead is seeking and finding new knowledge—"Research in the natural sciences above and beyond George Washington Carver—in the social sciences beyond Monroe N. Work."

Secretaries Given Advice On Improving Their Work

By INEZ J. BASKIN

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE — A fitting climax to the two-day meet of the Tuskegee Secretaries Assn.'s observance of National Secretaries Week, was the address Wednesday night of Mrs. Minnie G. Gaston, Birmingham, at the initial "Boss Night Banquet," held in the Pine dining room of Dorothy Hall.

Using "Mountain Peaks of our Profession," as a subject, based on the theme of the institute, "Challenge of a Profession" Mrs. Gaston opened her address with Biblical analogy, "that among the many types of persons God called was the secretary, with her hand on the pulse of the nation."

The speaker stated "knowledge and techniques were not enough on the job, and could prove to be a curse without character." She named some of the fogs that cloud the lives of people as selfishness, despair, nervous tension, fear and doubt. A satisfactory vocational personality is one of the basic essentials, characterized by the simple traits of honesty and loyalty, she said.

Cautioning the secretaries against having to be told every job to do, she said, "secretaries must be self-starters and have self-mastery, or be conquered by self."

"Never wait for the right moment to get started, but make it by beginning now, make persistence the watchword and failure will diminish."

Mrs. Gaston challenged secretaries to ask themselves the following questions and their answers would determine whether or not they had reached the mountain peaks of their professions. Have I delivered service in the best possible way? Have I rendered more and better service than I am being paid for? What can I do to correct some of my shortcomings?

Welcomes were given by Mrs. Blossom Cahill, on behlaf of the TSA and by Dr. Prince P. Barker on behalf of the Veterans Administration. It was disclosed by Mrs. Cahill that the idea of National Secretaries Week was originated by the secretary of commerce, Sinclair Weeks, seven years ago, with the major emphasis on self-improvement.

Dr. Barker gave four prerequisites as essential to meeting the 'Challenge of a Profession"; ethics, virture, excellence and living.

Serving as toastmaster, Charles Trout lent a humorous note, by giving a defintion of "model," whether boss, father or citizen "a small imitation of the real thing." The Rev. Raymond F. Harvey, pastor of Greenwood Baptist Church, presented the following nominees for awards, for the title of "Executive of the Year": Mrs. C. Franklin, Dr. A. B. Benson, Mrs. Ruth Doaks, E. P. Wallace, Dr. E. T. Odum, L. A. Green, Dr. A. W. Callinder, Mrs. K. D. Parker, Dr. J. D. Tarder, Dr. L. R. Williams, Mrs. Harriett Hubell, Dr. W. E. Lewis, Dr. D. J. Thompson and Dr. Howard Kellin.

Mrs. Laura McCray read the prize winning letter for the boss, from the secretary. Dr. Benson was the winner, with Mrs. Jones, his secretary, making the presentation. Dr. Benson was recently appointed chief of the clinical service, formerly he was acting chief.

Appreciative remarks to the approximately 75 guests and members were given by the president. Mrs. Billie Glover.

Tuskegee Gets $110,000 March of Dimes Grant

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —A March of Dimes grant of $110,000 will make it possible for Tuskegee Institute to improve its school of nursing and increase its fall enrollment.

The grant, effective immediately, was announced by Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee, and Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation (originally the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis).

The Tuskegee Institute school of nursing was founded in 1891. Its basic program was fully accredited by the National League for Nursing last year. It is the only collegiate nursing school for Negroes in Alabama, supplying an increasing number of graduate nurses to the South.

Dean Lillian H. Harvey, director of the program and dean of the school of nursing, said that Tuskegee will now be able to make a greater contribution to the field of nursing. It is hoped, she said, that it will be possible to increase enrollment in the nursing school to 160 new students and possibly to 180 in the near future.

In addition, Dean Harvey said, activities in the public health field will be expanded under the new grant.

With the new grant, the National Foundation has awarded more than $1,300,000 to support the nursing program at Tuskegee since 1945.

The principles and labortory methods course began Oct. 5 and will be followed by the workshop, part of which will be given at the Communicable Disease Center Laboratory in Montgomery and the Communicable Disease Center Laboratory at Chamblee, Ga., continuing until Nov. 7.

The group is composed of personnel from the State Public Health Laboratories in the United States and Hawaii, and similar personnel from several foreign countries. The foreign countries represented are Chile, Lebanon, Nigeria, Egypt, Poland, French Equatorial Africa, Austria, Soviet Union New Guinea, Jamaica, West Indies and Venezuela.

Primary purpose of bringing the group to Tuskegee Institute was to visit the Carver Fondation's laboratories to observe the work being done in mammalian cell and tissue culture as a part of the principles and laboratory methods course.

The Carver Foundation laboratory is operating a mammalian cell depository under the sponsorship of the National Cancer Institute of the National Institutes of Health. In addition, work is being done on the growth requirements of mammalian cells and the susceptibility of various cell strains to polio and other similar viruses.

NEGRO COMMUNITY

Alert and resourceful, Clark College conquered the Tuskegee Golden Tigers 14 to 0, in a hard fought contest in the Alumni Bowl here last Saturday afternoon.

A stout, stubborn Golden Tiger defense yielded two touchdowns while thwarting the Panther thrust which threatened to score on several occasions. Stopping Clark in the first period Tuskege on four occasions rolled deep in Clark territory only to be stymied; on the 16-yard stripe once; on the 1-yard line and on the 9.

After desperate wresting with a determined Golden Tiger, Clark began to roll after an error in which Willie Williams of Tuskegee hit Ulysses Marshall in the end zone for an apparent touchdown. The tally was ruled illegal because Marshall had advanced beyond the end zone and stepped back on the playing field.

Hughes, Hubbard and Mullins ground out the yardage by smashing to two first downs to advance the ball to the Clark 35. A five-yard off-side penalty against Tuskegee moved the ball to the Clark 40. On the next play Raymond Hughes, elusive Clark back, broke to his left, darted inside the tackle and wheeled to his right for a 45-yard jaunt to the Tuskegee 15. Hubbard and Hughes, alternating, drove the rest of the way with Hughes going over for the marker.

At the beginning of the fourth period Hubbard fired a rifle-shot to Wise, good for 29 yards to the Golden Tiger 5. Two plays later Hubbard scored for Clark then passed to McFadden for two points to end the scoring for the afternoon.

The Tuskegee Band and the Morehouse College Band will pause at the Ledger-Enquirer building Friday afternoon, Oct. 24, during the downtown street parade and salute the press as an expression of appreciation for the coperation the newspapers have given Tuskegee-Morehouse game each year.

Directors of both bands have worked out impressive features which will be presented for spectator entertainment during the intermission at the annual game at Memorial Stadium. The musical selections by these bands have always been of a high order and have evoked vociferous applause.

The Crimson Pipers with their accompanying baton twirlers, dressed in the flaming colors of Tuskegee, Gold and Crimson, will give a colorful demonstration before the game.

The directors of these musical organizations—Melville Bryant Tuskegee, and Wendell Whalum Morehouse, are well known in musical circles. At the appropriate time the bands will be combined and the fans will be given a rare musical treat.

Caliph Winfield, whose parents Mr. and Mrs. Murray H. Baker live in Tuskege, Ala., recently participated in a field training exercise with the 3d Armored Division in Germany.

Specialist Winfield, a medical aidman in Headquarters Company of the division's 36th Infantry, entered the Army last February, completed basic training at Fort Hood, Tex., and arrived in Europe in July.

The 28-year-old soldier was graduated from Tuskegee Institute High School in 1956.

Pvt. Troy E. Dawson, Jr., 18, whose parents live at Tuskegee, recently completed eight weeks of basic combat training at Fort Benning, Ga. He is a 1958 graduate of Tuskegee Institute High School.

New Lounge Dedicated At Tuskegee Institute

TUSKEGEE ISTITUTE — The dedication of the new lounge in the College Center Sunday afternoon brought a new dimension to college and community life here at Tuskegee Institute.

In giving the background of the Center, Miss Antoinette Mann, chairman of the Student Recreation Center, During the way years it was used by the U.S.O.

The Student Recreation Center fulfilled student needs for a gathering place on an informal basis. Staffed by a supervisor and two adult assistants it soon became necessary for a student committee to assist in activity planning.

This group became affiliated in 1951 with the Association of College Unions and has since been active in the Association, serving as host to the Regional Conference in 19[illegible].

The participants in the discussion: "The College Union at Tuskegee: Its Meaning and Value," were Leahmon L. Reid, for the students; M. D. Sprague, for the faculty and Charles E. Trout, for the alumni.

The prevailing implication from the three presentations is that new avenues have been opened for active and effective communication between these three groups and the community at large. It was stated that with the added facility of the new, spacious and attractively equipped lounge and student meeting rooms, the atmosphere is provided for evolving, maintaining and popularizing cultural and artistic values that promote an appreciation for gracious living.

Dr. L. H. Foster made a formal presentation of the lounge to the students. Miss Carole Joyer, a senior in the School of Education, accepted the facility in behalf of the students.

With the opening of the new lounge, the area formerly used as the faculty cafeteria, the entire area occupied by the Student Union covers more than 18,000 square feet. The use to be made of the new facility is indicated by the announced plans for the remainder of this week.

EXHIBIT IN THE HOLLIS BURKE FRISSELL LIBRARY

The Faculty and students of Tuskegee Institute will have an opportunity to see one of the latest circulating package exhibits of the United States Atomic Energy Commission. The exhibit, entitled "Summary of Atomic Energy", is presented as a public service, through the courtesy of Hollis Burke Frissell Library, December 3-19, 1958.

The "Summary of Atomic Energy" is an exhibit of 18 panels which simply illustrates, both graphically and in words, the story of atomic energy. Recently designed especially for the general public, the exhibit contains information about atomic structure, fission, radioisotopes, and some of the peaceful applications of atomic energy in the fields of industry, power production, agriculture, and medicine. One panel illustrates the use of an atomic reactor in producing electrical power. Another shows how radioisotopes are used in medicine to diagnose and treat diseases. Still another explains how industry is benefiting from atomic energy.

The exhibit is one of several Atomic Energy Commission exhibits available without charge from the American Museum of Atomic Energy which is operated by the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies.

Fisk President Addresses Tuskegee Summer Grads

Speaking for the 1958 Summer Commencement at Tuskegee Institute Friday night, Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Fisk University, told the 186 graduates that, "the education which your degree symbolizes is wasted unless it has made a different person of you." He added, "I hope that your years spent at Tuskegee have inspired you to do something for humanity."

Dr. Wright deplored the fact that there are too many degree holders who are worthless to society. He urged the class to: (1) Select two or three things that you want more than anything else in the world; (2) Be willing to pay the highest price for the things that you hold dear; and (3) Live your life daringly."

The speaker recounted the accomplishments of three well known persons to whom the world pays homage because they were willing to work hard enough and long enough to achieve what they wanted more than anything else from life. The three were: Helen Keller, Dr. Ralph Emerson Fosdick and Mahatma Ghandi. He urged the graduates to organize their individual resources and move boldly into the stream of life. He quoted St. Vincent's "the world is no wider than the hear is wide. The sky is no higher than the soul is high."

The Commencement brought to a close a very eventful summer at Tuskegee. Six special workshops brought to the campus some of the nations outstanding educators.

Commissions as Second Lieutenants in the U. S. Army Reserves were awarded to: Alvin Copelanad, Roscoe C. Crump, Franklin Douglas, Melvin J. Flowers, Andrew T. Lee, Theodore R. Patrick, Humphery L. Peterson, and Joe Carl Thomas.

Tuskegee Choir Acclaimed In Radio City Production

NEW YORK — "Top tune in the Radio City Music Hall production this week and rightly so is the Tuskegee Institute Choir of some 35 mixed voices", states Variety, Bible of show business.

The engaging, colorful production "Jubilee" marks the second appearance of a Tuskegee Institute singing group in the world's largest theater. The Tuskegee Choir helped inaugurate the famed stage shows when the Rockefeller establishment opened 25 years ago. In 1954, the Choir sang at the Metropolitan Opera House for a United Negro College Fund Convocation of Presidents.

"Well disciplined under director Relford Patterson," writes the Variety critic, "the choir does four numbers. It's well nigh perfect harmony as the unit of matched voices deftly handles 'Oh, What a Beautiful City' and 'Russian Picnic'. Jeanette Pitts and Richard Lowrie score nicely as soloists".

A native of Tuskegee, Miss Pitts just completed her freshman year at the Institute. Mr. Lowrie, a junior, is from Atlanta, Ga.

Marvalene Hughes, a junior from Eutah, Ala., alternates with Miss Pitts as soloist in the "Picnic" number.

Variety also credits Delano O'Banion of Chicago, a music senior at Fisk, for "a rousing solo of 'Ol' Man River' ably backed by the Tuskegee Choir.

Tuskegee Institute and Fisk University are among the 33 independent, accredited member colleges of the United Negro College Fund. For the eight successive year the choir of all UNCF members colleges are heard weekly over the American Broadcasting Network.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE CHOIR

By Louis Biancolli of the New York World-Telegram and Sun

"Here are 35 voices of remarkable strength and beauty, skillfully fused and balanced under the direction of Relford Patterson.

When I heard them the other night, they sang familiar numbers like "Deep River" and "Ol' Man River" with rich sonority and zest so traditional in Negro singing. The brightest and most agile singing occurred in a number called "Russian Picnic," in which Mr. Patterson and Raymond Paige coordinated conducting signals with split-second precision. I would have liked a few more numbers from the concert choral repertory. The Tuskegee Choir can handle the masters, and so can the Music Hall customers."

PRESIDENT ADDRESSES SUMMER ASSEMBLY

Presenting an oral travelog of his and Mrs. Foster's recent trip which carried them completely around the world, Dr. L. H. Foster told a record Summer Assembly audience that the experience had given him a more comprehensive picture of America's role in keeping alive the hopes of the smaller nations that would be free from communist domination.

He said, "People who have been under colonial domination and have won their freedom are apt to make some mistakes but these mistakes will be their own."

Concerning the Republic of Indonesia where the Tuskegee-Indonesian project for training teachers of vocational education is being carried on, he reassured his audience of the personal safety of faculty and alumni personnel stationed there.

He stated that Indonesia had been free only 12 years and that there was much that had to be done to fill the great lack of developed resources, the absence of basic items, equipment, textbooks and the basic interest in technical work. We as Americans must do something to implement our democratic ideas. There is a need for dedicated expression of the democratic spirit.

NEW STUDENT LOUNGE DEDICATION

The dedication of the new lounge in the College Center Sunday afternoon brought a new dimension to college and community life here at Tuskegee Institute.

In giving the background of the Center, Miss Antionette Mann, Chairman of the College Center Board, stated that the College Center opened in 1946 as the Student Recreation Center. During the war years it was used by the U.S.O.

The Student Recreation Center fulfilled student needs for a gathering place on an informal basis. Staffed by a supervisor and two adult assistants it soom became necessary for a student committee to assist in activity planning.

This group became affiliated in 1951 with the Association of College Unions and has since been active in the Association, serving as host to the Regional Conference in 1956.

The participants in the discussion: "The College Union at Tuskegee: Its Meaning and Value," were Leahmon L. Reid, for the Students; M. D. Sprague, for the Faculty and Charles E. Trout, for the Alumni.

The prevailing implication from the three presentations is that new avenues have opened for active and effective communication between these three groups and the community at large. It was stated that with the added facility of the new, spacious and attractively equipped lounge and student meeting rooms, the atmosphere is provided for evolving, maintaining and popularizing cultural and artistic values that promote an appreciation for gracious living.

Dr. L. H. Foster made a formal presentation of the Lounge to the students. Miss Carole Joyner, a senior in the School of Education accepted the facility in behalf of the students.

With the opening of the new Lounge, the area formerly used as the Faculty Cafeteria, the entire area occupied by the Student Union covers more than 18,000 square feet. The use to be made of the facility is indicated by the announced plans for the remainder of this week.

ALABAMA STATE APPROPRIATION

new Legislature—

Tuskegee Institute funds may be cut

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 20 (AP)—Tuskeegee Institue, located in the center of a racial controversy, may find difficulty in getting money from the Alabama Legislature next year.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, the incoming governor and a persistent critic of what he refers to as "certain faculty members" at the famed Negro school, says there is "considerable talk" of cutting off the appropriation.

A PRIVATELY endowed school, Tuskegee receives $350,000 a year in state funds under a contract to provide specialized training otherwise unavailable to Negroes in Alabama.

Patterson, without disclosing what his official stand will be, said "several members" of the Legislation have discussed with him the possibility of diverting the $350,000 to public education.

"It is pretty well known," he commented, "that some members of the faculty of Tuskegee Institute are engaged in stirring up racial strife."

PATTERSON mentioned no names, but recalled that during his attempt to halt the continuing boycott of white Tuskegee merchants by court action, he tried to show that some faculty members were active in the boycott.

The attorney general said, too, that the Tuskegee Civic Assn., which he sought to link to the trade boycott, has taken a leading part to get more Negroes registered to vote in Tuskegee and Macon County.

The TCA's president is C. G. Gomillion, a professor at the institute.

Patterson tried in vain to get a permanent court injunction against the TCA in hope of breaking up the boycott. Circuit Judge Will O. Walton said the state failed to prove that the Negro group sponsored or took an official part in the mass refusal to patroize white stores.

THE BOYCOTT, still inforce, began in June 1957 after the Alabama Legislation changed Tuskegee's boundaries and left only 10 registered voters inside the city limits.

Tuskegee Institute has received funds from the state for many years and the $350,000 appropriated this year makes up nearly one-tenth of the school's total budget.

The money isn't appropriated directly to the Negro institution. Instead, it goes to the State Department of Education to be used under contract to provide training for negroes in engineering, vetinery medicine and nursing, and graduate instruction in home economics and agriculture.

It ties in with the Southern regional education program under which the state pool their resources to provide specialized training on a share-the-cost basis.

TUSKEGEE'S PRESIDENT, Dr. Luther H. Foster, declined to comment on the prospect of losing the state funds. He said that is a "matter the board of trustees would have to consider."

Neither would he say whether the school would have to abandon any of its curriculum in the absence of the state aid. "But," he obseved, "you can't take $350,000 out of a $4 million budget without having some effect."

Calendar of Events

For the Week Beginning Sunday, July 13, 1958

DEAN T. S. WILLIAMS of the Tuskegee Institute school of Veterinary Medicine will be among the educators and officials representing 29 universities and colleges which have cadets attending the 1958 Fort Benning R O T C camp July 16 and 17.

Coming from senior educational institutions in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee and Puerto Rico, the group will be officially welcomed at 8:30 a.m.(July 16) by Major Gen. Paul L. Freeman, Jr., commanding general of the U. S. Army Infantry Center and the R O T C Camp, in the Infantry Center headquarters building.

After being oriented on the organization, scheduling of classes and instructional facilities of the U. S. Army Infantry School, the visitors will be escorted to the R O T C Camp in the Harmony Church Area.

There they will be greeted by Col. Carl R. Hill, professor of military science and tactics at the University of Georgia, who is serving as deputy commander and senior resident officer of the encampment. Col. Hill will brief the party on the camp's training program. Tactical problems and demonstrations, including a visit to the ROTC field problem test area where cadets will be undergoing leadership testing, will occupy the remainder of the day.

That evening the visitors will meet with cadets from their respective institutions for informal talks and dinner in a cadet dining hall.

Thursday morning (July 17) the officials will view additional cadet demonstrations on a company-grade-officer level and will be given "buddy-seat" rides, guided parachute jumps from an Infantry School 250-foot airborne training tower.

Gen. Freeman will honor the educators with an official luncheon (July 17) in the Main Officers' Mess preceding their departure that afternoon.

Tuskegee Vet Med Wives Seek To Aid Husbands

TUSKEGEE, Ala.— The Women's Auxiliary to the Veterinary Medical Association Student Chapter is a relatively new organization of the Tuskegee Institute Veterinary School. The purpose of the organization is to strengthen the bonds of friendship among the wives of the students enrolled in Veterinary Medicine and to provide an additional opportunity for the members to gain useful knowledge and an understanding of professional ethics and conduct.

A well rounded program consisting of classes for the wives, social and money making activities is planned at the beginning of each school year with the help of the faculty advisor and sponsors. The first activity for this year will be a Bingo Party which will be climaxed by a raffle at the Boy Scouts Hut, November 14. The most important phase of the program is the awarding of a scholarship to the sophomore who maintained the highest scholastic average during his freshman year. Mrs. Irma Matchett was sent to Philadelphia, Pa., as a delegate to the National Convention of the A. V. M. A. This was the first time a representative was sent to the convention. The information gained by the delegate at the convention has been most rewarding to the auxiliaries.

Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, 84, Dies; Used To Visit Here

News has been received here of the death Aug. 13 at Stockbridge, Mass., of the Rev. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, retired canon residentiary of the National Cathedral in Washington. He was 84 years old.

Dr. Stokes was a frequent visitor in Charleston, where he visited his sister, Mrs. Ransom S. Hooker, of 54 Meeting St. The New York Times published the following obituary today:

Born to great wealth and social position, Dr. Stokes labored diligently in the fields of education, religion and writing.

He was born in New Brighton, S. I., on April 13, 1874, the son of Anson Phelps Stokes, a multimillionaire banker. While still a child he inherited $1,500,000 from his maternal grandfather, Isaac Newton Phelps. By the time he was 26 that fortune had more than quadrupled and he had received another $5,000,000 from his father.

During his student days at Yale, Dr. Stokes decided to become a minister. He received a bachelor of divinity degree in 1900 from the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass.

In 1898, while studying for his divinity degree, Dr. Stokes had been appointed to one of the major administrative posts at Yale. As secretary of Yale for the next 25 years, he was one of the two or three key officials responsible for its development from a "college" to a university.

During this period, Dr. Stokes served as assistant pastor of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in New Haven, from 1900 to 1918, and was active in social work. He received a doctor of divinity degree from Gettysburg College in 1910.

He was a leading candidate to succeed Arthur Twining Hadley as president of Yale in 1921. A deadlock in the balloting by the trustees eventually led to the naming of a "dark horse" candidate, the late James Rowland Angell.

Dr. Stokes resigned as secretary, sold his home to Yale to be used as the Faculty Club, and, three years later, embarked on a new career in Washington as canon of the National Cathedral.

During the next 15 years, Dr. Stokes, in addition to his church duties, actively championed the causes of slum clearance, interfaith cooperation and opportunities for Negroes.

For many years he was president of the Phelps Stokes Fund, devoted largely to educational work among Negroes. He was at one time trustee of Tuskegee Institute.

He argued the case for Marian Anderson before the Daughters of the American Revolution when that organization refused to let her sing in Constitution Hall in 1938. His brief for Miss Anderson was published later that year under the title "Art and the Color Line." Later he was chairman of the Committee on the Negro American in Defense Industries.

Dr. Stokes wrote a short biography of Booker T. Washington and a monograph on Tuskegee Institute's first 50 years. He served as board chairman of the Negro Encyclopedia.

After his retirement in 1939, Dr. Stokes wrote a three-volume history, "Church and State in the United States," which was published by Harper's in 1950. He also wrote pamphlets on university schools of religion and planned a history of universities, for which he had assembled a large collection of source books.

In 1903, Dr. Stokes married Miss Caroline Green Mitchell, who survives. They had three children, the Right Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes Jr., Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts; Isaac Newton Phelps Stokes, a New York lawyer, and Mrs. John Davis Hatch Jr., wife of the director of the Norfolk (Va.) Museum of Arts and Sciences.

Two brothers and two sisters also survive. They are J. G. Phelps Stokes of New York, Harold Phelps Stokes of Washington, Mrs. Robert Hunter of San Francisco and Mrs. Ransom S. Hooker of Charleston, S. C.

Died. Anson Phelps Stokes, 84, elder statesman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, longtime canon of the Washington Cathedral, secretary of Yale University (1899-1921), author of the three-volume Church and State in the United States, father of Anson Phelps Stokes Jr., Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts; in Stockbridge, Mass. In 1900 he was graduated from the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass. Named secretary of Yale at 25, he also served as assistant minister of St. Paul's Church in New Haven, Conn. from 1900 to 1918. As canon of Washington Cathedral (1924-39), he organized the Committee on Religious Life in the capital, gave his energy to the advancement of Negroes, was a trustee of Tuskegee Institute.

Tax revenues increase—

Schools get last-minute hike in funds for year

BY HUGH W. SPARROW
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 4—Because of last-minute increase in tax revenues, Alabama's colleges and grade schools received $2,378,825 more at the close of the 1957-58 fiscal year Tuesday than had been anticipated.

This was shown in figures released by Finance Director Ed Pepper and Budget Director Jake Jordan.

Here's how the 11th hour windfall came about:

SEVERAL MONTHS AGO it was expected that school taxes were running short of enough to pay the education appropriations in full, Gov. Folsom, acting under the budget law, declared a 10 per cent proration of school funds in effect.

His order, in other words, meant that, unless conditions improved, schools, over the entire year, would suffer a 10 per cent cut in the amounts appropriated by the Legislature.

The 10 per cent cut was declared after it appeared that revenues from the sales and income taxes, chief supports of education, would run far behind the 1956-57 year total.

An improvement in the volume of school taxes was noted in the Summer and in August the percentage of proration was changed from 10 to 8.6 per cent.

Last minute increases in school tax revenues brought about a final adjustment in the percentage of proration to 7.81 per cent. That meant schools and colleges would get $2,378,825 more than they would have under the 8.6 per cent proration.

MUCH OF THE INCREASE, however, was due to a change in the date on which telephone and other utilities are required to pay their annual gross receipts taxes. That change meant that during the 1957-58 fiscal year the utilities would pay their taxes on Oct. 1, 1957, and again on Sept. 15, 1958.

Both dates are within the 1957-58 fiscal year and, in effect, it meant a one time double collection for the state.

The year wound up with sales tax collections almost a complete duplicate of collections during the 1956-57 year.

Income tax collections, however, were approximately $3 million lower. That was chiefly because the Legislature required the state to refund all overpayments of taxes less than $5. Prior to this year the state was not required to rebate amounts below the $5 level.

THE TOTAL AMOUNT appropriated for the Alabama special educational trust fund for the 1957-58 year was $117,133,705.86.

Under the 8.6 per cent proration, total amount of the appropriation which would have been paid was $106,233,510.

But under the revised percentage of 7.811 schools actually received $108,612,336 of the $117,133,705.86.

Departments, agencies and institutions supported by the Alabama Special Education Trust Fund were given the following additional amounts:

ALABAMA COLLEGE, $13,312.

Auburn, all branches, $121,694.

University of Alabama, all branches, $132,480.76.

Tuskegee Institute faces fund cutoff

Move could spark drive for Ala. U. registrarion

BY BAKER E. MORTEN

WASHINGTON

A source close to the Tuskegee Alumni Association chapter here said Friday that any curtailment of state funds to Tuskegee Institute in Alabama would signal an all - out drive among colored students to enroll in the University of Alabama.

The spokesman, a 1954 graduate of Tuskegee, made the statement following talk by John Patterson that the state legislature might cut the school's fund because some faculty members were active in a merchant boycott there.

The Tuskegee boycott, initiated 15 months ago by colored citizens, has crippled more than a dozen white businessmen. The crusade was sparked when the Alabama State Legislature redistricted the Tuskegee city limits disfranchising hundreds of colored persons from the vote..

TWELVE WHITE merchants have already been forced out of business by the "trade squeeze" and more are just barely hanging on. Patterson, in seeking to break the boycott, has accused the Tuskegee Civic Association of being responsible for the movement.

Despite a temporary injunction obtained against the TCA by Patterson, the crusade has increased in intensity and the courts have upheld the right of residents to buy where they choose.

In what appears to be his latest move to crush the boycott, Patterson, who is the incoming governor of Alabama, has stated that next year Tuskegee Institute "may find it difficult to obtain money from the state."

He says there is "considerable talk of cutting off funds" to the school because "certain faculty members are active in the boycott of white merchants."

APPROXIMATELY one-tenth or $350,000 of the school's budget comes from state appropriations. Tuskegee Institute, founded by the late Booker T. Washington, is a privately endowed school.

The school gets state funds every year under a contract to provide specialized education to colored students.

The AFRO informant would not speculate as to whether ricula would have to be shed in the face of a fund cut, but he emphasized that the all-white University of Alabama would be the target of colored students as a result of such action.

"Tuskegee students, having no other school to turn to, would undoubtedly make application to the University of Alabama if a cut of appropriations affects the curricula," the AFRO source stated.

"A fund cut at Tuskegee would probably touch off a wave of litigation by students to get into the University of Alabama," the source theorized.

MISS AUTHERINE LUCY was the first member of her race to enroll at the University of Alabama in February, 1956. She was subsequently stoned and driven from the campus by an unruly mob.

"It's pretty well known that some members of the faculty of Tuskegee Institute are stirring up racial strife," Patterson said, in hinting that the school may face a fund cut.

He made no mention of names in reference to the faculty members, but said that during his attempt to break the boycott by court action, he sought to show that faculty members were involved in the crusade.

Patterson tried for all he was worth to get a permanent injunction against the TCA, whom he charged was behind the boycott. Circuit Court Judge Will O. Walton granted a temporary injunction against the group to the state.

BUT HE refused to grant a permanent injunction because "the state had failed to prove that the TCA sponsored or took

That Racial Issue Again

Gov. May Halt Funds To Tuskegee

MONTGOMERY, Ala.— Alabama Attorney General John Patterson, incoming governor of the state, has publicly hinted that the $350,000 state aid to Tuskegee Institute may be cut off next year.

Patterson, a persistent critic of what he refers to as "certain faculty members" at the famed Negro school, says there is "considerable talk" of cutting off the appropriations by the Alabama Legislature next year.

Tuskegee, a privately endowed school located in the center of a racial controversy, receives $350,000 a year in state funds under a contract to provide specialized training otherwise unavailable to Negroes in Alabama.

Patterson, without disclosing what his official stand will be, said "several members" of the new Legislature have discussed with him the possibility of diverting the $350,000 to public education.

"It is pretty well known," he claimed, "that some members of the faculty of Tuskegee Institute are engaged in stirring up racial strife."

The attorney general mentioned no names but recalled that during his unsuccessful attempt to halt the continuing boycott of white Tuskegee merchants by court action, he unsuccessfully tried to show that some faculty members were active in the boycott.

Patterson also complained that the Tuskegee Civic Association, which he sought to link to the trade boycott, has taken a leading part in the campaign to get more Negroes registered to vote in Tuskegee and Macon County.

The boycott, still in force, began in June, 1957, after the Alabama Legislature changed Tuskegee's boundaries and left only 10 registered Negro voters insides the city limits.

Tuskegee Institute has received funds from the state for many years and the $350,000 appropriated this year makes up nearly one-tenth of the school's total budget.

The money isn't appropriated directly to the Negro institution. Instead, it goes to the State Department of Education to be used under contract to provide training for Negroes in engineering, veterinary medicine, and nursing, and graduate instruction in home economics and agriculture.

Tuskegee President Luther H. Foster declined to comment on the prospects of losing the state funds. He said that is a "matter the board of trustees would have to consider."

Neither would he say whether the school would have to abandon any of its curriculum in the absence of the state aid. "But," he observed, "you can't take $350,000 out of a four million dollar budget without having some effect."

an official part in the crusade."

State funds provided to Tuskegee are appropriated through the State Department of Education to give colored students training in engineering, veterinary medicine, nursing, graduate level home economics instruction and agriculture.

Tuskegee Institute President Dr. Luther H. Foster would not comment on the situation, but explained, "it is a matter the Board of Trustees would have to consider."

However, he did say, "you can't take $350,000 out of a four million dollar budget without having some effect."

MEANWHILE, colored residents here were still patronizing their own business establishments and setting up new ones to meet the needs once filled by white merchants.

Widow of Mr. William M. Scott

MRS. MARY T. SCOTT PASSES

Tuskegee Institute lost a devoted and constant benefactor with the passing of Mrs.Mary T. Scott of Paoli, Pa. this morning (Thurs. Oct.9, 1958). Her most recent area of interest at Tuskegee Institute was the Faculty-Staff Club - - named in her honor -- The MARY T. SCOTT FACULTY- STAFF CLUB. Funds which she prpvided helped to renovate and furnish this facility to provide a place for informal relaxati n, entertainment. and a cultural outlet for faculty and staff. Changing a long established custom of sending candy at Christmas for distribution to faculty and students, she converted her interest to an annual Christmas donation of three to five hundred dollars for operation expenses of the club.

Man of us can remember the annual visits of Mrs. Scott and her late husband,William M. Scott, who served for nearly thirty years on the Tuskegee Institute Board of Trustees. He operated an electrical appliance manuf cturing concern just outside of Philadelphia,Pa., in the town of Radnor. His interest In Dr. Booker T. Washington's work at Tuskegee began with a gift of $250 in 1913. Later, he raised this to $1,000 annually.

His interest continued under Dr.R.R.Moton and during the Hampton-Tuskegee Endowment Campaign in 1925 he gave $25,000 to Tuskegee Institute. In addition to his generosity to this institution, he cultivated many friends who became staunch supporters of our cause here. One of his pet projects here was tge Institute POWER PLANT. Not only did he provide funds and seek outside aid but he took an active concern in the people who ran the Power Plant. His close friendship with Mr. Benjamin J. Beard, who was then in charge of the Power Plant, now retired, extended over more than a quarter of a dentury.

It is diddicult to estimate the great loss suffered in the passing of these two humanitarians. They have left many monuments to their memory. The Scott's have provided the sum of fifty dollars for annual prizes for students in the Machine Shop and the Electrical Division for many years. Prizes were awarded to five students on Prize Night in 1958.

Will Be Awarded 1958 Alumni Award

Tuskegee Institute Will Honor 'Bama Businessman, W. J. Clemons

p-24 Courier Sat. 5-24-58

ANNISTON, Ala.—William J. Clemons, outstanding young businessman and housing developer of this city, will receive the 1958 Alumni award at the commencement exercises of Tuskegee Institute on May 26.

This dynamic and civic-minded young Anniston citizen was graduated from Tuskegee in May, 1940, where he enrolled in 1935 with "less than $40, two pairs of trousers, one dress coat and great anxiety over whether he would be accepted." His education was interrupted for lack of funds, but by hard work and perseverance, he was able to return to the institution and complete his college work.

Mr. Clemons is a veteran of World War II. Entering as a private, he applied and was accepted for training at the Engineer Officer Candidate School, Fort Belvoir, Va. He served in both the European and Pacific Theatres of Operation, receiving three battle stars, and now holds a commission in the United States Reserve [illegible].

Bill Clemons has made a definite contribution to the business and economic life of his community. Shortly after his return to civilian life, he organized a taxicab company which grew to a point where some 45 people are on the payroll with 109 direct dependents. But it was following another term of military service in Korea that he decided to add real estate to his activities; and it is in the field of housing that he is making his most notable achievement.

At the present time he is engaged in developing a 100-lot subdivision and is also giving technical assistance for subdivision developments in Sheffield, Ala.; Cedartown, Ga., and Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. Clemons has stated that his growing awareness of the need for adequate housing for the non-white population of this area spurred him into his present efforts in their behalf, and certainly his integrity, his warm personality and his concern with the progress of his community richly deserve his designation as "Tuskegee Alumnus of 1958."

Mrs. Clemons, the former Joy Banks, is a teacher in the Anniston public schools and shares her husband's ideals and beliefs. She is outstanding in church and civic circles.

"Education For Equality" Stressed By Attorney Gibson

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — James Slater Gibson, Attorney and 1918 Tuskegee Institute graduate, speaking on the subject, "Education For Equality" told an audience attending joint class reunion services here on November 2 that "To provide education for equality we must have a sound conception of values; particularly human values; we must appreciate the importance of the mind ..... the starting point is thinking equality ... We must explode the myth of race pride."

Attorney Gibson, representing both the returning members of the class of 1908 and 1918, blamed much of the world's current unrest, and U. S. national and local strife on pride. In proposing a more emphatic appraisal of accomplishment as a desirable alternative, he said:

"There is No just pride in merely being or existing as members of a particular race. There is just pride in the achievement and progress of the race or group with which one may be identified ..... Our education must put more emphasis on pride of accomplishment, and less or none whatsoever on pride of merely being.

Calling the years since his graduation the "Most eventful forty years in recorded history", Attorney Gibson noted the gigantic strides of scientific progress that these years have brought to pass. He said, "Scientific progress has eased man's struggle for existence, has made his life more secure against disease and has afforded him more leisure time in which to contemplate the bounties of God, the wonders of the universe...."

Turning from the praiseworthy past to a fermenting future, Attorney Gibson's view of progress in human relations was less elated. Stressing the need for maintaining simultaneous advancement in science and society, he said, Has our education pertaining to human relations kept pace with the advance of science? Is the idea that all men are created equal, a mere platitude? With the advancement of science and the development and demonstration of new theories, new theories of man's relation to his fellowmen must be developed and demonstrated.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE MOURNS DEATH OF OUTSTANDING ALUMNUS

Tuskegee Institute is today mourning the loss of one of its graduates who brought great credit to his Alma Mater in the field of Inter-Collegiate Athletics. Word was received early this morning of the sudden death of Edward H. Adams, a 1934 graduate of Tuskegee Institute, a four-year letter man in Basketball, Football, and Track, an All-American and All-Conference Selection, a former Dean of Men, Head Basketball Coach and Backfield Coach under the late Major Cleve L. Abbott.

Mr. Adams died suddenly at his home in Houston, Texas, where he and his family have resided for the past ten years. He has been basketball coach at Texas Southern University and a member of the Physical Education staff there since leaving Tuskegee Institute.

A native of Grambling, Louisiana, Mr. Adams came from a family which holds close ties with Tuskegee Institute. His mother was the daughter of the late Mr. Lewis Adams, who with Mr. George W. Campbell, sent for Booker T. Washington to come to Tuskegee to establish a normal school. His father, Mr. Charles P. Adams, was an early graduate of Tuskegee Institute who went to Grambling, Louisiana and founded an off-shoot of Tuskegee which developed into one of the most promising institutions in the Southwest. He is now President Emeritus of Grambling College and resides nearby.

The Adams and Driver families, kinsmen to the deceased on his mother's side, have long been associated with the work of Tuskegee Institute and the V A. Hospital. All of Mr. Charles P. Adams' children attended Tuskegee Institute. In addition to a Bachelors degree from Tuskegee Institute, Edward Adams earned a Master's degree in Physical Education from the University of Iowa in 1936 and later completed residence requirements for his doctorate at New York University.

He has had notable success with his basketball teams, having entered and won championships in mixed tournaments for the past several years. He was among the first coaches from predominantly Negro colleges to produce players who were taken into Professional Basketball.

Administration, faculty and friends are saddened by Mr. Adams' death and extend their sympathies to the bereaved.

Basketball World Mourns Death Of Edward H. Adams

By MARION E. JACKSON

COLUMBUS, Ga. — The basketball world is mourning one of its greatest teachers.

Edward H. Adams, all-time winning coach of Tuskegee Institute and Texas Southern University, is dead. The "Converse Yearbook" lists him as the second winningest coach in the nation with a record of 664 games won, 152 lost out of 796 played for an unbelieveable percentage of .811.

Throughout the capitals of the roundball sport there were expressions of shock and sorrow at his sudden passing. The TSU coach succumbed of a cerebral hemorrhage at 4:00 a. m. Wednesday morning in St. Elizabeth Hospital, Houston, Texas.

Adams was stricken in his 1:00-2:00 class but insisted on being carried home instead of to a hospital. His condition worsened and he was later rushed to the hospital where except for a brief rallying moment in which he recognized and talked to his wife, Gene, he never again moved nor talked.

Adams teams were tabled in Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference competition during his hey day at Tuskegee Institute As head basketball and baseball coach and assistant coach to the late Oleve L. Abott, for thirteen seasons, he turned out some of the nation's top teams. During this period he compiled the amazing record of 382 wins and 99 losses. He won four conference championships in basketball during the period. In baseball his teams compiled a record of 115 victories against 13 defeats and won the conference championship four times.

Adams was born in Grambling, La., August 17, 1910. He was the son of Charles P. and Martha N. Adams.

He was graduated from the Lincoln Parish high School in Grambling in 1929 and entered Tuskegee Institute where during his four years he lettered in football, basketball and track. He completed his graduate work at State University of Iowa, from which he received the M. A. degree and at New York University, where he had completed course and residence requirements for the D. Ed. degree.

Had he lived, Adams, who had been drilling his basketball players at night and coaching football in the afternoon, would have been starting his tenth year as head basketball coach at TSU, where his teams have won international recognition.

Since coming to TSU he compiled a record of 264 wins against only 54 defeats. His Texas Southern teams have won championships every year except one and they finished impressively in second place that year.

Since 1953 Adams' TSU teams have won consecutive conference championships, a 1956 NAIA Tip-Off Tourrney, were NAIA finalists in 1956, and semi-finalists in 1958. His 1958 teams established a tourney record for the highest number of points scored in an individual game when they trounced Georgetown University 121-109.

Coach Adams loved the game of basketball and got a great satisfaction out of coaching and his associations with his players who literally lived in his house. He jokingly referred to them as "his dependents." Adams was a strict believer in physical conditioning and somehow his players loved it. His fast breaking teams colorful to watch in action and his players worship this type of game. He was an avid student of the game a great handler of his players. It goes without saying that all who knew him liked him.

When asked before the 1958 season drills got underway, what factors have contributed to his success as a coach, he replied "I owe all my success to an outstanding group of talented, unselfish hardworking basketball players. It is the players who make the team whatever it is." Anyone who has followed Adams' success as a coach knows he meant every word he said.

It was at North Carolina College that he started and coached the stint at this growing college, he returned to Tuskegee.

Ed Adams is survived by his wife Gene Woods Adams, two sons-Laverne Adams and Kenneth Edward Adams, 8 years; daughter Kennette Adams 6; two brothers Henry Adams, Bastrop, La., and Ralph Adams, Portland, Oregon; two sisters, Fidelia Johnson, Grambling, La., and Theresa Garner, Grambling, La., and his father, Charles P. Adams of Grambling.

MR. MATTHEW WOODS, RETIRED MEMBER OF FACULTY, PASSES

Few members of the teaching faculty at Tuskegee Institute have left a more lasting impression upon those whom they taught than Mr. Matthew Woods who departed this life on Tuesday, April 29, 1958.

Coming from Dover, Oklahoma, at the turn of the century, Mr. Woods worked his way through Tuskegee Institute earning his expenses by work at the Horse Barn. He early attracted the attention of Dr. Washington by the grooming and expert care given to his saddle horses and carriage animals.

Mr. Woods graduated from the high school department with high honors in 1908. His first assignment was Manager of Marshall Farm, a large unit where many prep school students worked during the day and attended night school at the Institute. He studied at Cornell and Michigan State Universities where he qualified as an excellent teacher of Animal Husbandry and Farm Machinery.

From 1910 until his retirement in 1954 Mr. Woods was a member of the Agricultural faculty. He had charge of the Horse Barn and Central Transportation for many years. Students who worked under his direction received an object lesson in integrity and workmanship.

Mr. Woods was an outstanding athlete while a student, gaining the recognition of All-Time Fullback on the varsity team.

As a teacher he mastered his subject matter completely before coming before his classes. Since manual skills were essential in his courses he was capable of demonstrating the use of the most intricate machinery.

By part-time study Mr. Woods acquired the Bachelor of Science degree from Tuskegee Institute in 1931. His counsel and guidance helped many students to realize their ambitions both while at the Institute and in their life after graduation.

He leaves behind, his widow, Mrs. Evadne Clark Woods, three daughters: Mrs. Winifred Woods Davis, of Tuskegee Institute; Mrs. Letitia Woods Brown, of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Gwendolyn Woods Butler, Tuskegee Institute; four grandsons and one granddaughter.

FOR SUPERIOR SERVICE

While we have reported briefly on this item before, additional information has come in which highlights the honor bestowed recently upon Mrs. Eunice Rivers Laurie in a ceremony held in Washington, D. C.

We reported that Mrs. Laurie was one of seven persons receiving Distinguished Service Awards presented by Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Marion B. Folsom. She received the award for her work as a Public Health nurse with a venereal disease control program in Macon County, Alabama.

Not reported was the fact that Mrs. Laurie also received the third annual "Oveta Culp Hobby Award" consisting of an engraved certificate and a cash purse of $200.

Mrs. Laurie graduated from the then John A. Andrew School of Nursing in 1922. During the first four years following graduation she worked on the Extension Service sponsored "Movable School" with the State Health Department's Bureau of Maternal Hygiene.

Her next assignment was a very vital one. Prior to 1926-27 the Bureau of Vital Statistics had little accurate information on births and deaths of the people of Alabama. In four years of work with this Bureau Mrs. Laurie was able to establish a system of record keeping among midwives, undertakers and registrars to get the state included in the registration area.

Following eight months of service at the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital as Night Supervisor, Mrs. Laurie was employed with the U. S. Publkc Health Service in the Fall of 1932 and it is through this Service that she was honored.

Mrs. Laurie's friends in Macon County and in Alabama are legend and we are happy to join all of them in expressing our congratulations.

TUSKEGEE ALUMNI ADOPT
"ANNUAL GIVING PLAN"

Tuskegee Alumni Adopt 'Annual Giving Plan'

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala (ANP) — At the end of a three day inter-regional conference here concluded Monday, Tuskegee alumni adopted a plan for support of the school based on a widely accepted system known as annual giving.

Keynoting the meeting was W. J. Trent, executive director of the United Negro College Fund, Inc., New York City. He reminded the 150 alumni gathered from all over the nation of their challenging obligation to support their colleges and higher education in general.

He said, "Tuskegee alumni will have to decide what they want their institution to become then accept the responsibility of rendering their most able support." He urged them to tie together all of their little towns and big towns and cities into a functioning unit for annual support to their alma mater.

D. W. Andrews, president, Tuskegee General Alumni association, praised the four regional directors for bringing large delegations to the meeting and for their endorsement of the forward looking plan of annual giving to supplant the outmoded plan of dues collection.

The association also voted to sponsor an Alumni quarterly. With nearly $45,000 collected on the 75th Anniversary Alumni campaign the association voted to conclude this project at the end of the calendar year in order to concentrate on the annual giving program.

Frank A. Jones of Chattanooga was elected to succeed Henry B. Jackson as director of the Southern region. Other regional directors are: R. Conrad Vaughn of Detroit, North Central; Homer M. Griffin, Washington, D. C., North Eastern, and Jack L. Jones, Los Angeles, Western.

Andrew A. Means of Gary Ind., is chairman of the board fo directors and R. R. Moton Jr., of Atlanta is alumni trustee. Charles E. Trout of Tuskegee is acting executive secretary.

Tuskegee Club Honors Finders Of Purse Sunday; Judge Tatum To Present Awards

The three Nashville girls who found and returned a purse belonging to Miss Kirtsen Marie Jansen, missionary to Liberia, will be honored by the Nahville Tuskegee Club, Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock at a meeting in the Hadley Park Library.

Judge Sam Davis Tatum, Domestic Relations Court Judge will present the awards to Agnes Carmichael, Peggie Shaw and Christy Powell the girls who returned the purse along with its contents of $110.00.

The public is invited to attend the program, club officials announced.

Tuskegee Club Installs New Officials

Daniel J. Faulkner, president of the Chicago Insurance Brokers Association and vice president of the Cosmopolitan Chamber of Commerce and well known real estate and insurance broker, installed the new officers of the Chicago Tuskegee club Sunday during the colorful installation program at the Club House.

During his dynamic address, Faulkner, a past president and board chairman, called upon the new officers to take steps to mobilize all Tuskegeeans in this area behind a revitalized program of additional financial assistance to Tuskegee Institute, which will enable it to meet the challenges of the critical school integration situation, which forces land grant colleges to compete with State supported schools for desirable student material and qualified faculty members.

He installed Atty. Chauncey Eskridge, Class of '39, as club president. Eskridge has served previously as a vice president and member of the board of directors.

Other officers installed included Catherine Evans, '51 Class, vice president; Doris Murphy, Rec. secretary; E. A. Johnson, financial secretary; Mary E. Carter, corresponding secretary; Theodore T. Greene, treasurer; William J. Williams, historian; John H. Partner, custodian; Rev. Cyrus N. Riley, chaplain; D. T. Matthews, parliamentarian and Felix Washington, sergeant-at-arms.

In behalf of the organization, Faulkner presented Mrs. Mary B. Kerr, the retiring club president, with a beautiful genuine leather brief case, as a token of the club's appreciation for her remarkable leadership during the 1947 term, which represented the fourth time she had headed the 47-year-old club.

Mrs. Kerr, in turn, presented citations to several members for their valuable services to the organization during her administration. They included E. A. Johnson; John H. Partner; Lula L. Jones; Mary E. Carter and Daniel J. Faulkner.

AN INSTANCE OF POSITIVE ACTION

An incident occurred on the campus on Wednesday, February 12, shortly after Mid-Week Service about which we thought the entire Institute family should know.

A group of male students returning to the Emerys saw flames leaping behind the glass doors in Power Plant #1. While everyone was milling around, waiting for someone to return with the key to open the door, Joseph Itoka, a student who lives in First Emery, kicked through the glass making a hole large enough to reach the lock and open the door. With the help of the group, the flames were quickly extinguished.

His quick thinking is commendable, for much damage could have been wrought had the fire spread. Such positive action can often prevent small problems from developing into large ones. He incurred slight injuries of a leg but received immediate medical attention and has resumed his normal duties.

NUPTIAL MUSIC

A program of nuptial music was presented by A. R. Ashley, organist. Herbert Dillard sang "Because" and Rev. Peters of St. Louis, Mo., cousin of the bride, sang "I Love You Truly."

The bride, given in marriage by her uncle, William Peters, of Prairie, Ala., was lovely in a gown of Chantilly lace over white slipper satin. The full skirt with a front panel of pleated net was attached to a long torso bodice. The long tight sleeves ended in a point over the hands. Her fingertip veil of silk illusion was attached to a crown of seed pearls and irridescent sequins. She carried a bouquet of white carnations. Mrs. Marguriete Garrett served her sister as matron of honor. Misses Joan Goree, another sister, and June Taylor were bridesmaids.

They wore identical dresses of mint green faille fashioned on princess lines with a deeper green back panel and bustle. Their satin slippers were in matching shade. The matron of honor wore a hat of net and flowers and the bridesmaids wore flower bandeaux. All carried bouquets of yellow carnations.

Little Vivian, Valeris and Karen Stewart, nieces of the bride, were lovely flower girls in their long white organdy dresses over taffeta. They carried green net and velvet baskets of rose petals.

Henry E. Brown, of Montgomery, served as best man, and the ushers were David Davis, Cornelius Howard and Sampson Cotton, all of Montgomery.

RECEPTION

Immediately following the ceremony Mrs. Goree entertained with a reception in the church parlors.

The guests registered with Mrs. Vivian Stewart, sister of the bride, who was assisted by Mrs. Portis Young and Mrs. Jacquetine Townsend. Mrs. Laura McCray and Miss Eula Steeple presented the guests to the receiving line and directed them to the refreshment table. The table was covered with a linen cut work cloth and held bowl of frappe, platters of petit fours, mints and nuts. Here Mesdames Theo Reid Walker and Eula Patrick Stafford served the many guests who came to wish the newlyweds a future of happiness.

The brides' table covered with a linen cutwork cloth, was centered with a three tierred, heart-shaped cake, decorated with white spun sugar flowers and topped with bride and groom figurines. A ruffle of net edged the base of the cake and white carnation and fern decorated the table and base. Tall white tapers tied with silver bows flanked the wedding cake.

Mrs. C. T. McCadden and Mrs. N. H. Hoffman assisted with the planning of the wedding and reception.

For her daughter's wedding Mrs. Goree chose a dress of blue lace. She wore a small matching hat and her corsage was of white carnation. Mrs. Weatherly, mother of the groom, wore a dress of rose net. Her hat was in matching shade and her corsage was of white carnations.

The bride and groom left for a honeymoon trip to Atlanta, after which they will return to Hurtsboro, Ala., to the school system where Mrs. Weatherly is teacher of home economics and her husband teaches English and mathematics.

Tuskegee Institute faces fund cutoff

Move could spark drive for Ala. U. registrarion

By BAKER E. MORTEN

WASHINGTON

A source close to the Tuskegee Alumni Association chapter here said Friday that any curtailment of state funds to Tuskegee Institute in Alabama would signal an all-out drive among colored students to enroll in the University of Alabama.

The spokesman, a 1954 graduate of Tuskegee, made the statement following talk by John Patterson that the state legislature might cut the school's fund because some faculty members were active in a merchant boycott there.

The Tuskegee boycott, initiated 15 months ago by colored citizens, has crippled more than a dozen white businessmen. The crusade was sparked when the Alabama State Legislature redistricted the Tuskegee city limits disfranchising hundreds of colored persons from the vote.

TWELVE WHITE merchants have already been forced out of business by the "trade squeeze" and more are just barely hanging on. Patterson, in seeking to break the boycott, has accused the Tuskegee Civic Association of being responsible for the movement.

Despite a temporary injunction obtained against the TCA by Patterson, the crusade has increased in intensity and the courts have upheld the right of residents to buy where they choose.

In what appears to be his latest move to crush the boycott, Patterson, who is the incoming governor of Alabama, has stated that next year Tuskegee Institute "may find it difficult to obtain money from the state."

He says there is "considerable talk of cutting off funds" to the school because "certain faculty members are active in the boycott of white merchants."

APPROXIMATELY one-tenth or $350,000 of the school's budget comes from state appropriations. Tuskegee Institute, founded by the late Booker T. Washington, is a privately endowed school.

The school gets state funds every year under a contract to provide specialized education to colored students.

The AFRO informant would not speculate as to whether ricula would have to be shed in the face of a fund cut, but he emphasized that the all-white University of Alabama would be the target of colored students as a result of such action.

"Tuskegee students, having no other school to turn to, would undoubtedly make application to the University of Alabama if a cut of appropriations affects the curricula," the AFRO source stated.

"A fund cut at Tuskegee would probably touch off a wave of litigation by students to get into the University of Alabama," the source theorized.

MISS AUTHERINE LUCY was the first member of her race to enroll at the University of Alabama in February, 1956. She was subsequently stoned and driven from the campus by an unruly mob.

"It's pretty well known that some members of the faculty of Tuskegee Institute are stirring up racial strife," Patterson said, in hinting that the school may face a fund cut.

He made no mention of names in reference to the faculty members, but said that during his attempt to break the boycott by court action, he sought to show that faculty members were involved in the crusade.

Patterson tried for all he was worth to get a permanent injunction against the TCA, whom he charged was behind the boycott. Circuit Court Judge Will O. Walton granted a temporary injunction against the group to the state.

BUT HE refused to grant a permanent injunction because "the state had failed to prove that the TCA sponsored or took an official part in the crusade."

State funds provided to Tuskegee are appropriated through the State Department of Education to give colored students training in engineering, veterinary medicine, nursing, graduate level home economics instruction and agriculture.

Tuskegee Institute President Dr. Luther H. Foster would not comment on the situation, but explained, "it is a matter the Board of Trustees would have to consider."

However, he did say, "you can't take $350,000 out of a four million dollar budget without having some effect."

* * *

MEANWHILE, colored residents here were still patronizing their own business establishments and setting up new ones to meet the needs once filled by white merchants.

Dibble Honorary Referee Of 1958 Tuskegee Relays

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —Dr. Eugene H. Dibble Jr., medical director at Tuskegee Institute, has been named honorary referee for the 32nd annual Tuskegee Relays, to be held in the Alumni Bowl, May 2 and 3. Dr. Dibble over a long period of years has been keenly interested in the sports activities at the Institute and indicated his pleasure when asked to become the honorary referee for this year's relays.

B. T. Harvey, Alabama State College, Montgomery, commissioner of the Southern Conference, will again serve as referee; Dr. Frank L. Forbes, Morehouse College, Atlanta, will be the starter. Dr. Forbes, athletic director at Morehouse, has acted in this capacity for the past several years.

Among the other officials are: Whitney L. Van Cleve, clerk of course; Alfred J. Priestley, Xavier University, New Orleans, head finish judge; R. P. Griffin, Florida A&M University, Tallahassee, chief judge of track events; Theodore A. Wright, Savannah State College, Savannah, Ga., chief timer; P. H. Polk, Tuskegee Institute, official photographer; James A. Johnson, Veterans Administration Hospital, scorer; L. S. Workmen have been busily engaged for the past two weeks putting the track and the field in shape for the relays. New concrete curbing has been laid around both sides of the track by a late model curbing machine, the field has been reconditioned and other improvements have been made which should make the bowl an attractive place in which to stage this annual sports event.

THIS WEEKEND:

Two Sports Events Slated at Tuskegee

By B. T. HARVEY

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—This coming Friday and Saturday, the spotlight of the Sepia-Sports world will be turned on Tuskegee Institute.

On Friday May 2 will be the 30th annual Women's Sports Day to be held in the Alumni Bowl and again on Saturday in the same place, the 32nd annual Tuskegee Relays. Colleges and high school representatives will compete in both men and women's divisions. Some 30 colleges will be represented in the college division, with high school teams representing Alabama, Georgia, Florida Tennessee, Kentucky and North and South Carolina.

The two events, the oldest of their kind among Negro colleges, with the relays the third oldest in the United States are the brain children of the late Cleve L. Abbott, director of athletics for over 25 years at Tuskegee Institute. As a matter of fact, his service began at Tuskegee in 1916. Interrupted by war service in 1917, he returned in 1921 and remained until his passing in 1955.

Yes, he is gone, but his memory lives on in the lives and memories of his boys and girls.

And what is more fitting than that on May 2 at 1:30 p.m., when under usual conditions the afternoon session of the annual Women's Sport Day would be starting there, should be the dedication of the United States Army Reserve Center on the VA Hospital Road, Tuskegee, Ala. On the road that connects the Tuskegee Institute with the VA Hospital, and to memory of Cleveland Leigh Abbott, 1st Lt., Infantry AUS.

By WORNIE REED

Maroon Tigers Best Alabama State And Tuskegee Swimmers

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Morehouse swimmers defeated Alabama State and Tuskegee Institute here Saturday in a triangular meet. The Maroon Tigers scored 83 points, Alabama 59 and Tuskegee 53.

The Atlanta mermen captured six of eight first places and placed in all of the scheduled events.

Other encouraging performances were turned in by Latimer Blount (six feet two and one half inch, 184 pounder from Lucy Laney High School), who has tremendous potential in the breast stroke events; Emory Jackson (powerful junior backstroker, freestyler and diver); William Light (unclassified freestyler and diver).

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —Knoxville College, sparked by a 38-point scoring perfermance by brilliant pivot star Jackie Fitzpatrick, eked out a rip-roaring, hairline, last-second clutch victory in nipping Clark College, 68-64 in the finals of the 25th annual SIAC basketball Tournament played here in Logan Hall.

Fitzpatrick, who averaged 35.66 points in the Bulldogs' three-game uphill battle to their second SIAC tournament title in history, bulleted through 107 points in games played against Morris Brown, Benedict and their final round opponents from Clark College.

Knoxville College became the first SIAC affiliate from the State of Tennessee to win the coveted tournament plum back in 1956 when the Bulldogs turned back Morehouse College in the finals.

For Clark College, the defeat was frustrating. They got perhaps the second most outstanding play in the tournament from little Edward Jones, whose unbelievable shots, repeatedly brought salves of cheers from the galleries.

Regardless of the super-duper play from Gerald Tate, Eugene Walker, Robert Bell, Milton Fields and Oscar Holder, the Cardinal and Black muffed their bid to win their third SIAC championship, having previously won 1940 and 1954.

Knoxville led 21 to 12 after the first ten minutes of play and led 37 to 30 at the half. With seven minutes left in the contest, the Cinderella Clark Panthers tied the score at 55 to 55. A nip-and-tuck battled raged in the waning minutes in which Clark lost Oscar Holder, Eugene Walker and Edward Jones via fouls.

With approximately a minute left in the final game, the score was again knotted. However, Knoxville soon went ahead on a field goal by Jackie Fitzpatrick who was fouled while shooting. Fitzpatrick picked up two extra points, and put his team ahead 68 to 64, the final score.

Clark moved into the diamond-studded, deluxe finals by beating Fisk University 64-52, then returned to the floor in the quarter-finals to edge South Carolina State 61-60, and outpointed Florida A & M's visitation champions 80-74 in the semi-finals.

The Panthers' battle to the finals was a rags-to-riches story. During the regular season the Cardinal and Black five won 9 and lost 6 in the league play against the overall victory mark of 11-8. The brilliant Panthers have no home practice court, and this made their showing even more remarkable.

The form sheet which sent the unseeded Clark College quintet against the Bulldogs was based on splendid team spirit, cohesive play, heart and hustle, and a tremendous and superlative coaching job by Leonidas S. Epps.

Clark College, in beating the FAMU Rattlers, kept alive a hex that has handicapped the Rattlers through the years of never having won two tournaments in a row. The Rattlers annexed the visitation crown with a 16-1 loop mark and will play Texas Southern University Feb. 27-28 Mar. 1 for a berth in the 32 team NAIA championships at Kansas City, March 10-15.

The Panthers last won the SIAC championship in 1955 when a memorable five sparked by Roman (Dock) Turman and Julius Bunn came out of obscurity to dazzle the field.

State Cage Tournament Scheduled at Tuskegee

By E. P. WALLACE

When the Alabama Interscholastic Athletic Assn. state basketball tournament gets underway here Friday at 9 a.m., sports fans will see 18 championship prep teams in action, as each is a champion from its respective district.

For the first time, the AIAA will sponsor both the single and double "A" tournament, this permitting the smaller high school boys to participate in a state tournament, vying for state championship with teams in their category. Of the 18 schools that are to be represented here this weekend, nine come from the single "A" division.

The winner in each division will be awarded identical trophies for first place, likewise in runner-ups as well as in the consolation bracket. This, according to W. H. Coston, executive secretary of the AIAA, is designed to stimulate a greater participation incentive on the part of class "A" school players.

In the double "A" area the winner will represent Alabama at the National Tournament held in Nashville, where the team will compete with leading quintets of the nation.

Among the teams competing here this weekend in pursuit of the state crown and national recognition will be local Carver High Wolverines; Druid High, U.S. Jones High, Carver of Dothan; Council High of Huntsville, Carver of Gadsden, Mobile County High, Tuskegee Institute High and a Jefferson County team.

Participating in the single "A" division will be teams from Dora; York, Tallassee, Mt. Meigs, Millers Ferry, Hartford, Piedmont, Moulton and Jefferson County. The single "A" division will pry the lid off this 1958 tournament with the first game at 9 a.m. Friday Special provisions are being made for students planning to attend all four sessions of the tournament, two on Friday and two on Saturday. With proper identification, pupils will be granted a 50 cents savings if they purchase a season ticket instead of buying one for each of the sessions.

Consolations and finals will be played Saturday afternoon and night closing out with the awarding of trophies, etc All games will be played in the college's Arena. William Mills is tournament director.

Panthers Play Golden Tigers Tonight At Joe Louis Gym

The Golden Tigers of Tuskegee are in Atlanta today to meet a Clark College team which is struggling to break a three-game losing streak which has dampened considerably the hopes of Clark fans.

Morris Brown's Joe Louis Gymnasium tonight at 8 p. m., will be the scene of the encounter and for the Panthers, victory tonight is virtually a must, for the Panthers will next face tough Xavier and Jackson College in a road series.

Ahead Morehouse, a strong contender for SIAC top honors, the Panthers showed good form, but were probably a bit rusty from the holiday lay-off. Several days of [illegible] may now have them in top shape.

tonight brings a 3-3 record to Atlanta to lay on the line. The Panthers have only one conference victory to their credit, that at the expense of Lane. Both teams have suffered defeat at the hands of Allen, Tuskegee Monday night by 74-68 and Clark before the holidays.

—o—

Clark will probably start the contest tonight with Holden, Fields, Walker, Tate and Edward Jones. As in previous games, he can be expected to sustitute freely, using freshmen Theotis Robinson, Henry Clark, Bobby Bell, and Joe Carter frequently.

—o—

Gene Walker, Panther center whose defensive ability has made him one of the team's mainstays, came through against Morehouse Saturday with one of the best offensive performances of his career with the Panthers. Now in his senior year, Gene will probably turn in increasingly impressive records as the season progresses.

—o—

Milton Fields was the "man of the hour" in the Morehouse game, however, as he poured several consecutive long-range field goals through the hoops during a basket-for-basket flurry which occured about mid-way the game. At guard, Fields is co-captain of the Panther squad.

—o—

Captain to this year's squad is Gerald Tate, who not only ranks as a great competitor but also as the team's top scholar. A music major, Tate has consistently had a high place on Clark's honor roll and twice was selected to have his biography listed in "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges." Tate was named center on the Georgia Tournament's "All-Tournament" team.

Benedict 5 Bumps 'Skegee For 6th Win

Columbia, S. C.—Benedict College cagers went on a scoring spree in the third quarter here last week to rout Tuskegee Institute, 83-61, and win their sixth straight victory of the regular season.

With the score tied, 23-23, with four minutes left in the second quarter, Benedict's Lou Goolsby and his twin brother, Varlee, began finding the range and dumped in a combined total of 12 quick points, while Eddie Murphy added four more to give the Carolinians a 39-31 half-time lead.

Tuskegee's Thomas Lampkin led both teams in scoring with 20 points, but fouled out late in the third period.

By that time, however, the Benedicts had stretched their lead to 28 points, and Coach John Brown was playing his reserves.

Eleven Benedict players entered the scoring column with both Eddie Murphy and Walter Simon connecting for 16 points, followed by Levi Jones with 15.

Morehouse Visits Tuskegee Tonight

Morehouse's undefeated basketball team which boasts a 7-0 record will play Tuskegee Institute tonight in Logan Hall. The Maroon Tigers departed early this morning for the important SIAC contest.

The Maroon Tigers have won seven straight games since finishing as runner-up in the Georgia Invitational and if victorious the Golden Tigers would strengthen their campaign towards the SIAC visitation title.

Last weekend, the Maroon Tigers won close road games from Alabama A & M 74 - 70 and Fisk University 75 - 71.

Tuskegee Institute meanwhile bowed to Benedict 83 - 61 and Bethune Cookman 102 - 71. Other losses were at the hand of Fisk University 71-56, Clark College 77-74, Xavier 88 - 61 and Florida A & M 88 -

Tuskegee Institute has defeated Allen 73 - 58, Morris Brown 60 - 53 and Alabama A & M 70 - 65.

Head Basketball Coach Ross Owens will rely heavily upon the services of his phenomenal scoring ace, Nathaniel Frazier, Savannah, Ga., to keep Tuskegee out in front.

Dr. Frank L. Forbes, director of physical education and head basketball coach at Morehouse, will count on his leading scorer, Ozzie Bynum, Brooklyn, N. Y., to match shots with Nat Frazier.

In addition to Nathaniel Frazier, Tuskegee can depend upon the services of Thomas Lampkin, Detroit, Mich., Lewis Fontno, Houston, Texas, Earl Watts, Clearwater, Fla., Robert Duckworth, Pensacola, Fla., P. P. Jackson, Montgomery, Ala., Alvin H. Stevens, Jr., Trenton, S. C., Winslow D. Griffin, Washington, D. C., Gwindell D. Bradley, Memphis, Tenn., and Lewis O. Carter, Ft. Lee, Virginia.

TUSKEGEE RIPS ALABAMA, 91-77

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — After several derailments in recent weeks the Tuskegee Golden Tiger Basketball Express returned to solid, smooth track to roll by the Alabama A & M Bulldogs, 91-77, here in spacious Logan Hall Saturday night. With Forwards Nathaniel Frazier and Alvin Stevens as engineers, and Guard Thomas Lampkin as conductor, the Golden Tiger Express shifted into high gear after two minutes of play to take a lead of 6-3 and led all the way.

Old reliable Nathaniel Frazier sizzled 25 points through the netting, 16 of them in the last half to spark the Tuskegee attack while teammates Alvin Stevens and Thomas Lampkin canned 21 points each. James Lightfoot rendered yeoman service by tossing 16.

In the matter of field goals, however, Tuskegee hit 33 and A & M College hooped 32. A very close contest in the matter of shots from the floor. The difference came at the free throw stripe. Tuskegee netted 25, A & M College counted 11.

A deficiency which proved very costly. Joe Avery, A & M forward, caught fire in the second half and closed with a total of 16. While Alford Franklin and Charles Kimbrough tallied 11 apiece in the A & M cause. Brilliant flashes by Henry Boykin and Charles Ford, who tallied nine each, kept A & M within hailing distance of the Golden Tiger Express.

In the preliminary game the Golden Tigerettes tripped the Albany State College lasses (Albany, Georgia) 45-38, in a close pulstaing contest.

Off to a slow lead the Albany State lassies were edged by Tuskegee, 22-21, at halftime. At the end of the third quarter Tuskegee was leading by a score of 33 to 30. In the fourth quarter, however, the Tigerettes increased their lead to seven points and made that lead hold. For the losers Wylene Jones flipped 27 points to cop high scoring honors for the evening. For the victors Missouri Morris with 18 and Jean Wilcox with 14 led the way to the Tuskegee victory.

Morehouse Stops Tuskegee for 8th Straight S. C. Win

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—Morehouse college, current leaders of the SIAC basketball pack, toppled the Tuskegee Golden Tigers, 81-70, for the eighth straight conference victory here in Logan Hall Wednesday night.

Impressively cool in their skillful formation and execution of fancy scoring patterns, the Morehouse Maroon Tiger on two successive field goals, by William Penniman, broke a 7-7 deadlock in the first period and poured an avalanche of points through the hoops, an avalanche which engulfed Tuskegee, 43-25, at the end of the first stanza.

With Ozzie Bynum and William Penniman in the play-maker role, Leonard Johnson, Samuel Phelps and Marion Thomas darted deceptively, dribbled skillfully and drilled 20 points each in a superlative play of control basketball.

Although baffled in the first half Tuskegee roared back in the second with Nathaniel Frazier and Wilbert Sutton aiding Thomas Lampkin and David Crier in throttling the Morehouse attack and narrowing the lead to 8 points, 58-50 in the third quarter.

Then Morehouse with Thomas, Johnson and Phelps hitting timely and Bynum meshing one or two baskets crucially, rolled to final victory, 81-70.

The Morehouse defense at times was as superb as the offense. High scoring Nathaniel Frazier, consistently brilliant, Golden Tiger forward, was guarded closer than the high reserve gold supply of the United States Treasury at Fort Knox. In the first half Frazier had no points. In the second half, however, Frazier found the range for 11, about half of his normal total for one game.

For Tuskegee and the losers cause Lampkin sacked 20 points, Wilbert Sutton meshed 16 and the consistently dependable Nathaniel Frazier hooped 11.

Benedict College Nips Tuskegee Tigers, 67-64

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —Benedict College, Columbia, poured a dozen points through the hoops in the closing minutes of play to ease by the Golden Tigers of Tuskegee, 67-64, here in a game marred by frequent bobbles and less than average field goal shooting.

Off to a slow start both teams experienced difficulty in finding the scoring range. After 14 minutes of play Tuskegee led, 15 to 16. Benedict tied the score at 20 and surged ahead, 30-24, at halftime.

Trailing Benedict at the midpoint, Tuskegee struck with lightning swiftness. James Lightfoot, Alvin Stevens and Thomas Lampkin hit field goals in rapid succession to even the count at 30. For 10 minutes both teams came to life and battled furiously to capture the lead. Tuskegee pulled abreast of Benedict at 34. Then Benedict overhauled Tuskegee at 39. Thereupon Benedict garnered a six-point lead, 45-39, but Tuskegee quickly reduced that lead and fought valiantly until Benedict forged ahead in the closing seconds of the contest.

Edward Murphy sacked 18 points to cop high point honors for the evening while Lou Goolsby and Walter Simon bagged 15 each.

In the losing cause Old Reliable Nathaniel Frazier, who is closing a brilliant basketball career at Tuskegee, shipped 15 points through the netting. Siding him were Wilbert Sutton, with 13; Thomas Lampkin, with 12; Alvin Stevens and James Lightfoot with 8 apiece.

Tuskegee closes its 1957-58 basketball season in games with staunch rival, Alabama State College Wednesday night, Feb. 12, and Fisk University, Saturday night, Feb. 15, Tuskegee lassies will play the Bethune-Cookman College sextette. All games to be played in Logan Hall at Tuskegee.

Led by the hustle of Wilbert Sutton, Alvin Stevens, James Lightfoot and the rebounding of Bobby Copeland, Tuskegee with the Fort Valley Wildcats clawing vigorously for the lead, forged ahead 33-34 at the intermission.

Sparked by timely, effective clutch shooting by Nathaniel Frazier and Thomas Lampkin, who combined to mesh 24 points in the second stanza, Tuskegee nipped Fort Valley by two points before the buzzer nullified a pirate bold steal and brilliant drive-in by an alert Fort Valley player to give the game a movie studio finish and Tuskegee a long sought victory.

A close game all the way, Tuskegee enjoyed in the first half a six point margin, 33-27. In the second half Tuskegee led by 11 points, 60-49. Then Fort Valley launched a terrific scoring offensive with Jerry McCollough drilling 21 points through the hoops to narrow the Tuskegee lead and to capture individual scoring honors for the game. Roy Robinson, McCollough's teammate, flipped 11 while Willie Rawlins and Augustus Roberts bucketed 8 apiece.

For Tuskegee, Wilbert Sutton hooped 16; Thomas Lampkin and Nathaniel Frazier neeted 14 each, while Alvin Stevens and James Lightfoot settled for 8 apiece.

In the preliminary of the double header with Fort Valley the Tuskegee lassies tripped the visitors, 31-25, to make a clean sweep of the games with their Georgia rivals. The victory gave Fisk a 2-0 record. They meet Morris Brown Wednesday and Alabama State Friday. Both wiill be home games.

Tuskegee Loses Quarterback For Xavier Clash

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — When the members of the Golden Tiger football team roll into New Orleans for their second conference game of the current season, they may have to play without the services of Quarterback Willie Williams who was sidelined Saturday following a vicious tackle by one of the players on the Alabama A and M College team. In the opener Tuskegee defeated A and M, 18 to 6, the game drawing an early attendance record of than 6,000. Dennis Keller will take over in the event Williams is unable to play.

Sexeral scouts were in the stands Saturday, observing Coach Cleave's Tigers. James Hawkins, chief scout of the Xavier University team, said after the game that Tuskegee played against the A and M College Bulldogs, the Gold Rush team will have to improve considerably to stop the running attack of Tuskegee's backfield quartet led by Curtis Horton, the 165 pound speedster from Mobile, Alabama. Hawkins also had praise for Robert Dabney, Tuskegee tackle, as well as for other members of Tuskegee's quick-charging line.

The line will probably be the same one that started the game against A and M: Mitchell Parks at center; Glover Jones and Wallace Brown, ends; Donald Stewart and Jesse Lewis, guards; Robert Dabney and Henry Jackson, tackles.

Coach Van Cleve said the backfield starters will remain unchanged: Dennis Keller, quarterbacking; Curtis Horton at left halfback; George Drake at right halfback and Charles McGhee at fullback.

The 38-man Tuskegee travel squad will leave for New Orleans by bus early Friday morning. The coach will stage a light workout late Friday afternoon and a limbering up exercise Saturday morning. While in New Orleans the Tigers will be housed on the Xavier University campus.

MOREHOUSE TO PLAY TUSKEGEE ON OCTOBER 24

COLUMBUS, Ga. (ANP)—Plans for the Morehouse College-Tuskegee annual football game Friday, Oct. 24, were completed recently by athletic officials from the two colleges. The game, a night skirmish, will be played in Memorial stadium.

Tickets for the contest, expected to be a sellout, went on sale immediately following the meeting.

Lockett, and Wendell Whalum, of Morehouse college, and Dr. Edward L. Jackson, Ross C. Owen, L. W. Davis, Melville C. Bryant, and R. S. Darnaby of Tuskegee.

Coach Van Cleve Starts 4th Year at Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. —Whitney L. Van Cleve, a native of Kokomo, Ind., and a former Golden Tiger, began his fourth year as head football coach at Tuskegee Institute on Sept. 1.

Van Cleve succeeded Cleve Abbott, grid coach at Tuskegee for more than a generation. After Abbott's death in April, 1955, Coach Van Cleve came to Tuskegee from Grambling College, Grambling, La., where he served as assistant football coach and dean of men.

A Golden Tiger graduate of 1948, Van Cleve served for one year, 1949-50, as assistant football coach under Cleve Abbott before his appointment to the positions held for five years at Grambling College.

He begins his fourth year as coach with average prospects. With normal losses the Golden Tigers have several good prospects. These prospects are expected to restore some of the former Tuskegee gridiron prestige. Curtis Horton and Clarence Fields are expected to supply the speed and the scoring punch in the backfield, while Robert Dabnay, candidate for All-America honors, and Wallace Brown, are expected to lead a strong forward wall.

SOPHOMORES

Sophomores expected to bolster Golden Tiger chances for a successful season are: Glover Jones and Addis Lamb, ends; Joseph Roberson and Edward Barnes, tackles; George Luster, guard, and Charles McGhee, Oliver Ware, William Dillard and Arthur Sawyer Jr., backs.

Operating from the regular T and the winged T, the Golden Tigers expect trouble from Clark College, Atlanta; Xavier University, New Orleans; Fort Valley State College, Fort Valley, Ga., Dillard University, New Orleans, and arch rival, Alabama State College, Montgomery.

Coach Van Cleve will be assisted by an alumni staff: Allison H. Figaro, Arthur Sawyer Sr., and Oscar Downs.

Xavier Edges Tuskegee, 27-26

NEW ORLEANS—Xavier capitalized on the new extra point scoring system to upset a big Tuskegee team 27 to 26, here, Saturday afternoon, in the Gold Rush Homecoming.

The Gold Rush ed all the way, but had to fight a last period surge by Tuskegee. Xavier jumped to a two touchdown lead in the first period.

Quarterback Herman Bacchus went over from the six on a quarterback keep to climax a 79-yard drive from the opening kickoff the point after TD failed but moments later frosh fullback John Perdue cracked over from the Tuskegee two and Bacchus passed to halfback Willie Stallsworth for the extra points.

Tuskegee scored moments later in the first period when quarterback Willie Williams passed to his end Glover Jones on the Xavier 25 and Jones sailed in for the score the play covered 255 yards. The try for extra points failed . . . The Golden Tigers pulled within two points in the second period when Williams hit his flashy halfback Curtis Horton in the end zone from the Xavier 4, but again Tuskegee's try for the extra point failed.

Xavier scored twice more in the third period. Guard Peter Lewis blocked and downed an attempted Tuskegee punt in the Golden Tigers end zone for a TD, and frosh fullback Sam Thompson came in to kick the extra point. But the Tigers roared back on the pitching arm of Williams, who climaxed a 65-yard drive in the same period to score from the 2 on a quarterback keep but again Tuskegee's try for the extra points failed.

Moments later in the same period, Xavier guard Amos Evans intercepted a Williams' pass and raced it back 55 yards for another Gold Rush TD. The try for the points after failed. Tuskegee tried to pull the game out of the fire in the final period with Williams heaving 16 passes with four completed. However, it was a blocked Xavier punt by Tuskegee guard Ulysses Bernard that gave the Golden Tilers their final TD, and halfback Donald Sims ran it over to put the Tuskegee team within two points of victory.

Penalties hurt Whitney Van Cleves Tuskegeeans. They suffered a total of 16 for yardage lost of 170 yards, and they came at a time when the Golden Tigers were in the midst of drives. However, it was the two points under the new scoring system scored by Xavier in the first period that spelled the difference in the game.

Knoxville Nips Clark 68-64 To Win SIAC Basketball Title

Weekly New Orleans La. 1959
Sat. 3-1-58

Tuskegee Institute, Ala.---Sparked by Jackie Fitzpatrick, rangy 6-3 sharp-shooter from Somerset, Ky., the third-seeded Knoxville College Bulldogs, of Knoxville, Tenn., squeezed out a 68-64 victory over the unseeded Clark College Panthers of Atlanta, Ga., in the finals of the Silver Anniversary SIAC Basketball Tournament, played Saturday night, at Logan Hall Gymnasium.

With Fitzpatrick and Edward Jones, Clark's fast-driving guard from Orange, N. J., matching basket for basket, the score was later deadlocked 62-62 and 64-64.

Then in the final minute of play, Fitzpatrick shot a field goal from underneath and cashed in on two charity tosses to put the game "in the bag," and give the Bulldogs their second tournament championship. Knoxville won the tournament for the first time in 1956.

The Clark Panthers, who upset the top-seeded Florida A & M University Rattlers, 80-74 in the semi-finals, put up a stirring battle before going down to defeat. The ten-team event got underway here Thursday with Clark defeating Fisk University, 64-52 and later shading South Carolina State College, 61-60. Knoxville romped to an 88-75 triumph over Morris Brown College and polished off Benedict, 90-85.

Knoxville was ahead, 21-12 midway the first half and clinged to a 37-30 margin at halftime.

Displaying expert marksmanship and uncanny precision Fitzpatrick led the scorers with 36 points, and got lots of help from Randolph Moore, Charles Frazier and Robert Austin. Jones, who finished in the No 2. spot with 28 points, was ably supported by Eugene Walker, Robert Bell, Gerald Tate, Oscar Holden and Milton Fields.

In the consolations finals, the Florida Rattlers, who captured the 1957-58 visitation crown with a brilliant 16 and 1 record, ran away from the Benedict Tigers, 91-67. The defending champion Rattlers had previously defeated the Bethune-Cookman College Wildcats, 81-79, while the Benedict Tigers, seeded No. 2 by the Tournament Committee, beat the Alabama State College Hornets, 85-81 and nosed out the Morehouse College Maroon Tigers. 63-62.

SPORTS OF THE WORLD

BY MARION E. JACKSON

Atlanta World Atlanta, Ga.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.— Competitive sports for women is part and parcel ingrained in the heritage of the United States. That this is true, is a living monument to the late Cleveland Leigh Abbott, who in discarding many of the taboos and myths surrounding women competition lifted them from the obscurity of the classroom to the glorification of the outdoors here at Tuskegee Institute. His thesis has been accepted at Tennessee State, Prairie View, Bethune-Cookman and Alabama State, all boast first rate teams of the weaker sex.

Years ago, Abbott working without medical or scientific data, insisted that girls who competed in sports for a number of years, after quitting competition, could pursue gainful careers, marry and rear families. He stood by his guns, although there were biased people who decried women competitive sports affected child-birth later in life.

Sun 5-4-58

The years to follow were to prove Abbott impeccably correct in his thinking. A survey of a cross-section of 150 women athletes from Tuskegee Institute, whose ages ranged from 19 to 45, revealed that none had been adversely affected by sports participation. Of the 92 who were married, 62 had children. All said they would take part in athletics again, and none had any injuries affecting their health.

o—o—o

Indeed, out of 10,000 girls who, over a period of 25 years, had competed in sports at the famed Tuskegee Women's Sports Day, and in AAU indoor and outdoor meets, how many do you think reported having a serious injury. Only one — a femur fractured while hurdling.

o—o—o

One of the greatest Tuskegee women stars, Dr. Mable Smith Lott, who starred at Tuskegee Institute during the late Thirties, is a member of the administrative staff at Texas Southern University. Mrs. Alice Coachman Davis, who has mothered three children since winning the high jump at the 1948 Olympics at London, England, is a member of the faculty at Tuskegee High School; Mrs. Lula Haymes Green and Mrs. Rowena Harris Goode, both successful housewives, are employed at the U. S. Veterans Hospital at Tuskegee Institute; Mrs. Leila Perry Glover, a one-time Tuskegee Institute ace, is at Atlanta's Henry McNeal Turner High School.

o—o—o

Remember Mary McNabb, record breaking star at Atlanta's David T. Howard high school, and later at Tuskegee Institute, is a mother and housewife here.

Catherine Hardy, whose glitter-jaunts for Fort Valley State, won her AAU and Olympic honors, is married and a successful housewife.

Tennessee State boasts a virtual who's who in global track on its campus in Isabelle Daniels, Margaret Mathews, Barbara Jones, Mae Figgs, Audrey (Mickey) Patterson, Jean Powell, Yvonne Macon, Wilma Rudolf, and Lucinda Williams, all having known AAU, Pan-American or Olympic competition.

Tennessee State's greatest stars have included Jean Powell, Audrey (Mickey) Patterson, Emma Reed, Margaret Mathews, Lucinda Williams, Barbara Jones, Martha Hudson, and Alfrances Lyman.

An array of America's most famed beauties have competed in swimming. Remember, Esther Williams, Eleanor Holmes, Ethel Catherwood, Vicky Draves, Betty Robinson, and Ann Curtis.

Add the legendary Helen Wills Moody, June Stover, Valerie Winn of Great Britain, Suzabbe Lenglen, Kathleen McKane, Helen Jacobs, Alice Marble, Pauline Betz, Margaret Osborne, Louise Brough, Doris Hart, Maureen Connolly and Shirley Fry of tennis fame.

Global track competition has acclaimed Fanny Blankers-Koen, Stella Walsh, Helen Stephens, Marjorie Jackson, Anna Larsson, Olive Mary Hall, Elizabeth Robinson, Nancy Cowperthwaite, Hazel Kirk, Audrey (Mickey) Patterson, Mildred McDaniel, May Faggs, Theresa Manuel, Annette Rogers, Rena McDonald, Mary Carew, Juanita Watson, Joserh'ne Schessler, and Dorothy Lyford.

How does the AAU feel about women athletics. A 20-page report of a special commission of the USA Amateur Athletic Union, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Roxane Anderson, reported no harmful affects from women athletics.

o—o—o

Mrs. Anderson was assisted in research by eight men and women, including a doctor, a psychiatrist and an Olympic swimming coach. The introduction of the report mentions that less than 3 per cent of American women go to the universities, and the lack of opportunity for exercise among the masses is deplored. The commissioners believe sport is just as important as other human activities to women.

o—o—o

AAU rules demand women must be members of all committees covering the sports women taking part. Boxing, wrestling and tug-of-war are barred to them—but water polo is allowed. All women wanting to compete in any event under AAU jurisdiction must have a medical examination immediately before the competition or present a doctor's certificate not more than 60 days old, certifying their fitness. A girl must be 14 before she can compete in track and field events; 12 before she can enter swimming and springboard diving competition; 15 before she can compete in high diving.

HERE ARE THE QUESTION MARKS ABOUT WOMEN SPORTS

Is athletics detrimental to women's health?: Ten doctors, whose combined experience extends over 50 years, says definitely not—but girls must be kept physically fit before engaging in strenuous competition.

Are women "masculinised by competitive sports?: The first conclusion about this is the spotlight on sports tend to make women athletes more aware of good grooming, good dress taste and the need for a more generally feminine appearance and manner . . .

o—o—o

Does sports affect child-bearing?: The report insists that sports never harmed this function and somewhat elaborate time tables show that the number of women who have taken part in strenuous competition and have then reared successful families.

o—o—o

Thousands of girls have competed in the Annual Tuskegee Women's Sports Day, have enjoyed competitive athletics, competed in major competition which gave them an opportunity to see the United States, as well as foreign lands, and retired to marriage and the role of mothers. There have been relatively few who were denied this right through competition.

Cleveland Leigh Abbott left this legacy to women everywhere and competent authorities have sustained him.

Tuskegee Institute Upsets Alabama State Bv 24 To 20

By PHIL WEAVER

The Tuskegee Golden Tigers, displaying a tremendously versatile game, fought off a late quarter Alabama State College surge Thursday to defeat the Hornets of Montgomery, 24-20, in Cramton Bowl.

Both teams sported terrific passing games as an estimated 15,000 watched the spirited Golden Tigers take a first quarter lead and go on to upset the favored Hornets in the annual holiday game.

The Tigers won the toss and elected to receive. Quarterback Willi Williams threw 37 yeards to left end Freddy Holland on a third down pass play but two plays later Hornet halfback Parks Mitchell intercepted a Williams pass and the 'Bama boys took over on their own 27 yard line.

The Hornets were ineffective in three plays and punted out to the 38. From here, the Golden Tigers started a drive that in ten plays had State on their own one. Fullback Charles McGehee took scoring honors and dived over for first blood. The PAT attempt was no good and Tuskegee led 6-0 with 6:25 left in the first period.

Eddie White, State quarterback, took the Tuskegee kickoff. The speedy little play caller gathered in the boot on his five yard line and trucked it all the way back to the Tiger 20 before being dragged down by a lone Tuskegee back.

The Hornets, attempting to pass, were set back 17 yards in three plays by the charging Golden Tiger line, and had to punt. The State boys were not to be denied, however, for late in the second quarter Tuskegee punted from deep in their territory to midfield and the Hornets started goalward.

Sparked by several eight - 10 yard drives from halfback Albert Lowery and fullback Frank Hawkins the State eleven had Tuskegee with their backs to the wall in 13 running plays.

Hawkins, who showed tremendous prowress all during the game, took a White handoff of tackle from the two yard line and evened things up, 6-6.

The Hornets took the second half kick-off on their own 40 yard line. Halfback David Veazey tried off tackle twice but was tripped up both times and State took to the air.

White, passing to his left flats, threw short, and right into the waiting arms of defensive back George Drake who went, untouched, 45 yards to score. The try for two was no good and the score was 12-6.

An intercepted pass, four plays after the Golden Tigers kicked to State, proved fatal to the Hornets again.

Tuskegee halfback Floyd Jones snared two straight passes from Tiger thrower Williams after the interception on the 48. The second caught him in the end zone and climaxed a 52-yard scoring drive. The conversion was no good. The score, 18-6.

The Hornets fought back in the third period and intercepted a Williams pass on their 34 - yard line. State drove to midfield in six plays and James Hall, relieving White at the pilot post, took things in hand.

On the third down, Hall backstepped 10 yards and heaved to left end, Roosevelt Shelton who caught it and went over for the second Alabama score. The PAT made the score 18-12.

A two-way exchange of the ball after the kickoff put the Tigers in possession on their 35 yard line. Running bids from halfbacks Ulysses Marshall and Mitchell soon had the Hornets desperate to halt the driving Golden Tigers on their own 35. Williams chose to pass.

This time he found Marshall open and hit the rangy halfback with a perfect strike at the 15. Marshall gathered it in. turned, and went over for the final Tiger TD.

State recovered a fumble late in the last quarter, immediately following a miscue they lost themselves, and started a drive on the Tuskegee 48.

Hall passed to Mitchell at the thirty on the next play to get things going. After two incomplete passes, Hall found Mitchell open again, this time in the end zone and with less than a minute remaining in the game.

State had time only for the conversion, which was good, and the upset, 24-20.

STATE'S LOWERY INTERCEPTS TUSKEGEE PASS

Halfback Albert Lowery (25) of Alabama State leaps into the air to intercept Willie Williams pass in the first quarter of Thursday's game at the Bowl. The pass was intended for Frank Jones (28). Curtis Horton (1), Tuskegee halfback and State fullback Frank Hawkins (45) are in the picture. Tuskegee outscored Alabama State, 24-20, before 15,000 fans.

Xavier Gold Rush Nips Tuskegee Golden Tigers In 27-26 Thriller

NEW ORLEANS, La. — In one of the most thrilling games seen in the Xavier University Stadium in many seasons the Gold Rush triumphed over their opponents from Tuskegee Institute by a margin of one point 27-26. The Gold Rush took advantage of the new scoring rule and passed for two points after their second touchdown thus making up for having missed the attempted kick after the first marker.

Xavier led their SIAC opponents throughout the game but Tuskeege pressed dangerously close all the way. A 15 yard penalty when they were on the Xavier University seven yard line proved to be very costly for the visitors.

The Gold Rush took the opening kick off and without relinquishing the oval went for five first downs and a TD with quarterback Herman Bacchus going over from eight yards out. Freshman fullback John Perdie of Selma Alabama plowed over from the one in the same quarter and with a pass from Bacchus to Willie Stallworth counting for two points Xavier lead 14 to nothing.

TIGERS STRIKE BACK

Tuskegee struck back hard as substitute quarterback Willie Williams tossed the giant end Glover Jones for 25 yards and Jones continued for 22 more and a score just as the first quarter came to a close. Williams threw a short one to the outstanding back of the day for the visitors, Curtis Horton, minutes later for another in each case the extra point attempt failed and Xavier lead 14 to 12 at half time.

Tuskegee's last two markers came as quarterback Williams went around his own end for 14 yards scoring standing up and in the fourth quarter on a blocked punt.

Two guards playing heads up ball came to the front for Xovier and kept their team in the lead Peter Lewis Sr. fell on a fumble behind the Tuskegee goal line in the third quarter and Amos Evans sophomore guard raced 55 yards with an intercepted pass. The extra point kicked by Samuel Thompson injured substitute fullback from Xavier University proved to be the margin of victory.

Alabama State, Tuskegee Collide In Bowl Today

By PHIL WEAVER

The Alabama State Hornets will whet their stingers this afternoon against Tuskegee and make a grab for Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference honors as Cramton Bowl's annual Thanksgiving Day game brings the two teams together at 1:30 p.m.

The Golden Tigers hold a 22-9 lead in the series, four of which ended in a tie, but the Hornets of Montgomery are favored to win Thursday and made it No. 10 in the series and the tenth in Cramton Bowl.

Xavier, Lane, Morehouse, Clark, Alabama A&M and Fisk fell to the Hornets as head coach Arthur Simmons skippered the '58 eleven to its best season in many a year. A non-conference team, Savannah State, gave the Hornets their only loss.

On the Tuskegee defeated list are Alabama A&M, Fisk, Knoxville, and Morehouse. The Tigers lost to Xavier and Clark and tied Fort Valley in conference play.

A Hornet win would hand them their first conference crown in 19 years and mark Alabama State College undefeated in SIAC play for the first time in more than twice that many years.

Tuskegee coach Whitney L. Van Cleve, who will be completing his fourth year in the Golden Tiger camp, is expected to have a few upset tricks and hopes up his sleeve but has plenty of respect for the 'Bama State boys who have put his team down five of the last six encounters.

The Hornets, never this close to the conference title, will be led by fullback Frank Hawkins, halfback J. Harvest Mitchell and halfback David Veazey.

Along the Hornet forward wall and leading the center line attack, are Andrew Sewell and Alfred Pondexter.

Sewell is at tackle and weighs 197 pounds. Pondexter plays alongside him at guard and weighs 180.

Big guns in the Golden Tiger den are backs Willie Williams and Dennis Keller, both lauded passers.

As the Hornets pull reins from their victory ride long enough to eye Tuskegee's threat of upset, the Golden Tigers make plans to strengthen their defense.

Defensive tackles Robert Dabney and Jessie Lewis will be leading the Tuskegee linemen with help from guards Frederick Dudley and Mitchell Parks and end Joseph Roberson.

A pregame, homecoming parade through downtown Montgomery will start the day's action. Both schools' bands will perform at halftime with a colorful show from Tuskegee's drill team.

The alumni homecoming dance at the Alabama State gymnasium will end the day's festivities.

Tuskegee, Fort Valley Tie, 6-6

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Golden Tiger Tuskegee trailed Fort Valley for three quarters, then Willie Williams arched an aerial to Glover Jones who lateraled to Frank Jones who scampered 35 yards for the tally to tie the visitors 6-6 before a thrilled, weather-chilled Homecoming crowd in the Alumni Bowl Saturday afternoon.

Fumblefits plagued both teams, throttling several scoring chances by both squads. Frequently Fort Valley would drive into Tuskegee territory to have its advance stymied by a fumble or by a Tuskegee interception. Frequently Tuskegee would march into Fort Valley territory only to have the coveted aerial trophy land in the hands of a Fort Valley player.

In the first period Fort Valley tallied early to take the lead after a smile from fickle Lady Luck. Fort Valley punted to Tuskegee, the slippery oval glided the fingers of a would-be Tiger receiver only to be pounced on by an eager Fort Valley player. Two thrusts at the line moved the ball to the Tuskegee 25-yard line. On the next play Leland Mangrum slanted to his left, broke sharply through tackle for a 25-yard scamper to the Tuskegee green pastures and the 6 points. The try for the extra point was nullified when the receiver snagged a pass beyond the end zone.

Alert Fort Valley defenses against Golden Tiger guided missiles smothered two Tuskegee scoring threats in the first half. Late in the first quarter Tuskegee recovered a Fort Valley fumble and began to roll. But an interception on the Fort Valley 20 by an alert Wildcat ended this scoring threat. Again Tuskegee began to roll late in the second half only to have a Wildcat snatch one of William's aerials in his end zone and streak 45 yards to the Fort Valley 38.

Defenses and defenders, however valiant and effective, cannot endure forever. Williams, Golden Tiger quarterback, with magical faking, caught Glover Jones in the clear and whizzed one into his arms on the Fort Valley 35. Jones latered to his name sake who carried the mail across to deadlock the game. The placement attempt failed.

Alabama State, Tuskegee Institute Will Clash In Dixie Classic Today

Jackets-Hornets Duel Expected To Pack Cramton Bowl

Crown Hangs In Balance When Arch-Rivals Meet

By MAX MOSELEY

Arch-rivals Alabama State and Tuskegee Institute clash Thursday afternoon in Cramton Bowl in the 35th annual Dixie Classic. Kickoff is set for 1:30 p.m.

The Golden Tigers from Tuskegee hold a whopping edge in the series with 22 wins, nine losses, and three ties. Last year the local Hornets came through with a 19-13 victory and again this year rule the favorite.

The championship of the Southern Intercollegiate Conference rides on the game. The Hornets can gain the title with a victory. Tuskegee can gain only the satisfaction that goes with the victory over an arch-rival. They're out of the running for the conference crown.

A special tabloid section giving complete pre-game coverage of today's Alabama State Teachers College-Tuskegee Institute annual football classic appears in Section E. Statistics about the game and stories about the two schools are included.

If the Hornets win they will share the loop crown with the always-strong Florida A&M Rattlers.

A mammoth parade which goes through the streets of Montgomery at 9 Thursday morning kicks off the day's activities for 'Bama State's Homecoming.

The Hornets have whipped six conference teams. They clubbed Xavier, Lane, Morehouse, Clark, Alabama A&M, and Fisk in their march toward an unbeaten season.

The Hornets boast a strong offense and have some fine backfield performers to back up the claim. Frank Hawkins, J. Mitchell, Danny Sumpter, and Edward Baldwin have been the aces for head coach Arthur Simmons.

Willie Williams and Dennis Keller have been Coach Whitney Van Cleve's best passers this year and Robert Kemp, Wallace Brown and company have been tough on the enemy defenses.

One thing both coaches have in their favor is that neither has to work to get his team "up" for the game. The game has always been rated a toss-up in recent years but this year 'Bama State rates a touchdown better than the visitors.

Besides the game, the parade is always a high light of Thanksgiving Day in Montgomery. This year more than 35 bands led by the marshalls and the fancy-stepping majorettes of Alabama State College will pass in review before the thousands of spectators

'Skegee Kills 'Bama's Deathbed Rally

By RIC ROBERTS

CRAMTON BOWL—The Alabama State College Hornets, gunning for their first SIAC title since 1939, were severely disappointed here in Montgomery, Ala., before 20,000 fans on Thanksgiving Day, when they were upset, 24-20, by Tuskegee's Golden Tigers.

Confronted with the possibility of unseating Florida A. and M., and thus breaking Jake Gather's seven-year grasp on the SIAC throne, Coach Simmons' favored charges were not in the ball game until the final quarter, when they quickly annexed 14 points.

However, the victors had established an 18 to 0 lead by the end of the third period—having roared into battle from the opening kick-off. At 6:23 of the first quarter, the Tigers had marched 62 yards, with fullback Charles McGhee diving across from the one.

THE TITLE-MINDED Hornets retaliated, scoring in 13 plays. Neither converted, so the issue was tied, 6-6. Frank Hawkins' 76-yard return of the kick-off, carrying to the Tuskegee 20, set up the touchdown.

Alabama State threatened to make the game farcical, early in the third period, with two quick TDs. The first was a 46-yard run by George Drake, on an interception, and the second was the result of a forward pass, Willie Williams to Floyd Jones.

An insurance TD was added, after James Hall's heave to end Rosevelt Shelton had narrowed the issue, 18-12. This latter sewed up the game, 24 to 12.

The Hornets then flashed the form thousands had expected of them, by stacking up two TDs via forward passes by Williams and Hall. Caught by Parks Mitchell, both were enough to make the game suddenly interesting again—especially when 2 points were added, on the first. A horde of bands and colorful ceremonies marked the 38th renewal of the Turkey Day spectacle.

Tennesse girls smother Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Sun-splashed relay carnival fans saw the Tennessee State Tigerbells swamp Tuskegee, 158-76, for their fifth straight senior women's relay championship here last weekend.

Enjoying a fast track for the first time this season, Coach Edward Temple's AAU champions and U.S. Olympic team veterans captured seven of ten firsts in the two-day affair.

The Nashville Cinderbelles romped home one, two, three in the 100 and 50-meter dashes, and then ran exhibition 220 and 440 relays when Tuskegee scratched, to leave both races as solos for the Tigerbelles.

SOPHOMORE Lucinda Williams brought the crowd to its feet by nipping her favored teammate and AAU 220-record holder, Isabelle Daniels, at the tape.

Earlier the fleetfooted Miss Daniels, world's indoor and outdoor 50-yard record holder, posted a 6.2 in the 50-meter dash. Miss Daniels' winning time is a full tenth of a second faster than the 6.3 world mark for this distance.

"THEY ARE beginning to take shape," Temple said, while thinking about his girls' chances against the Russians in Moscow, July 26 and 27.

"This warm weather is what we need if we are going to be ready this summer."

Art Clinic Held For Macon County Teachers

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — As number one, in a series of work-study conferences for the improvement of instruction in the Macon County Schools an art clinic was held Nov. 22, 1958, at Children House, Tuskegee Institute, Alabama. All of the more than fifty teacher, principals and consultants in attendance left with a feeling of having had a real stimulating learning experience. They are now planning a similar work experience in "Art for the Yuletide" emphasizing School, Home and Community Decorations.

Mrs. Laura N. Jones, principal, Mrs. Arvena W. Turner, Arts and Crafts Teacher, Mr L. Crawford, Industrial Arts Teacher of Children House were responsible for working the Arts and Crafts Building the most attractive setting for this clinic. Productions from each grade were exhibited. Life, models, paintings, drawings challenge, puppetry, decorative arrangements portraits etchings and cut outs formed much of the exhibits.

Mr. William Peterson, teacher Macon County Training School as consultant on drawing and writing, gave demonstration and illustrative material which were most enthusiastially received by the group. They learn how to write all over again as he worked with each person.

Mrs. Elaine Freeman Thomas Art Instructor, Home Economics Dept. Tuskegee Institute was the able consultant on drawings, proportion, color and portraits. Her presentation brought "every one into the Art" as each partcipant drew portraits of the next person.

Mrs. Arvena W. Turner, consultant, was the gracious hostess and coordinator of the clinic. She welcomed the group as well as the opportunity made possible for such an enriching venture. Assisting her was Mrs. Ruth W. Adaires, Library Service; Mrs. Turner compiled and distributed many very useful pieces of instructional materials as aids for teachers on all levels. Mr. James Smith, senior interne, Industrial Arts gave a fine demonstration on use of available material in a college.

Visiting the clinic were Mrs. Hattie W. Kelley, Dean of Women, Tuskegee Institute and former principal of Children's House followed the clinic from which teachers gained many ideas of value in their work

The Macon County Board of Education through Mrs. Mary J. Lightfoote, supervisor of instruction, will conduct other clinics on various areas according to evident needs for the professional improvement of its personnel.

RURAL LIFE AND AGRICULTURE

By LEWIS W. JONES

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the seventh and final in the series of articles by Dr. Lewis W. Jones, Director of Research, Rural Life Council, Tuskegee Institute. Mr. Jones is an eminent sociologist and an expert in field research. He was one of the workshop conductors at the Summit Conference of Negro Leaders held May 12-13 in Washington, D. C. Mr. Jones is a former editor of the Houston (Texas) Informer and a contributor to scholarly magazines. In his penetrating series of articles he has cast new light on some of the acute problems facing the Negro group on the farm. These problems upon which he focused the spotlight of research need for their solution aroused sustained, vigorous public opinion.)

Number 7

DO SOMETHING?

Always, after a presentation of facts as has been done in the six preceding articles somebody asks, "What can be done about these things?"

Some of the descriptions make clear what ought to be done but who and how are the great questions.

First, the press directed to the Negro public can gather information on these problems and report what they find. Publishers may disagree with me, but I feel that a crusading press is healthy and gains readers. I remember when some Negro weeklies were banned in Southern small towns and pains were taken to get them and circulate them surreptitiously. These papers were then of great importance to the morale of the people.

Another thing the press can do is to print certain information Negroes need but can't get anywhere else. For example, there is an effort now to employ more native workers in agriculture and move them to the places where they can get employment. The Negro paper can publish directions to United States Employment Services offices and encourage their readers to get themselves registered at these offices.

Another example — Negro county agents may not know or may be afraid to inform Negro farmers about services available to them such as far moperating loans from Production Credit Associations. Why not publish the fact that Negro farmers can secure operating loans at 4 1-2 per cent interest instead of the 8 and 10 per cent they pay locan banks and money lenders. Tell them where Production Credit Association offices are located.

Committees might be organized to investigate abuses of the policies of federal agricultural agencies and have these reported to congressional committees and to the Department of Agriculture. Such action can be taken by influential people in the cities when such would be suicidal if done by the farmers themselves.

Some type of organization might be formed to look after the Negro farmers interests as the Urban League does in some places for the interests of the Negro industrial worker. Such an organization could well concern itself with the employment of the stranded Negroes in the small towns of the South. In the current drive to secure industrial plants all over the South a top notch state committee of Negroes could be formed in each state to encourage factories to come and get commitments from them to employ Negroes. This committee could be influential in some cases in bringing state officials and white committees to an agreement to the hiring of Negroes if the northern industrialists are to be reassured about location of the plants. Such committees might secure the cooperation of Labor unions.

The Negro press can be a great weapon in this area. Northern plants that agree to "white employee only" policies in their southern plants can be exposed. Those who adopt an employment policy that hires people on the basis of skill rather than race can be encouraged by publicity.

The struggle for civil rights is basic and there should be no letup in it. However, there are those people who by temperament and inclination could launch and carry on a program for economic opportunity. There are those people outside the South who are distressed over the unlearned and unskilled Negroes coming to them who would gladly lend aid to a program for training and employment in the South.

These things can be done and some people might find doing them an adventure of considerable satisfaction. Who are they- Where are they?

DR. DIBBLE SPEAKS TO HOME AGENTS

Dr. E. H. Dibble, Jr., head of John A. Andrew Hospital here, speaks to home agents in their first banquet dinner. The medical director told the group about health improvements made in Macon and surrounding counties through cooperation of all agencies toward better health and welfare programs.

A NEGLECTED BROTHER

Negroes in the South that have the least done about their disadvantages and problems are the rural Negroes and Negroes who work and live on farms, especially. A conspicuous lack among them is that they have no organization in this day when nearly every self-conscious group does have some kind of an organization to look after the interests of its members. As they have no organization so they have no leaders or spokesmen. There is nobody with any sizeable group of farmers behind him who can speak out for the Negro farmer.

There are all kinds of organizations of farmers in the South but none of these are concerned about the problems peculiar to Negro farmers. The National Farmers Union has not gained strength in the South. The Farm Bureau Federation is the strong farm organization in the South and it fails to serve the Negro farmer's interests. It has employed a few Negro organizers and seeks to enroll Negroes in segregated "auxiliaries." The Negro organizers are new but the practice of Negro farmers enrollment is not new.

Plantation owners have long practiced taking out memberships for their tenants. These tenants did not participate in the affairs of the organization and some only knew they were members when they saw on the statement of their indebtedness to the landlord the membership fee that had been paid for them. In many places a picnic has been given for the colored auxiliary each year with speeches that meant nothing. The meaning of Negro membership in the Farm Bureau was that when the organization decided to act as a pressure group its impressive numerical strength included count of the auxiliary members. The pressure was used, however, in the interest of the big farmers and not for the welfare of the small owner or tenant.

In the 1930s there were organizations of tenant farmers. One of these was accused of communist control and was subject to violence and intimidation of a ruthless sort. The other of the tenant farmers organizations, the Southern Tenant Farmers Union (now the National Agricultural Workers Union) was organized in Arkansas in 1934. It still struggles to improve the situation of the agricultural worker but the formidable opposition it meets has not allowed it to gather the strength that would make it effective in the achievement of its purposes.

The Farm Bureau, the local financial interests, and the politicians in the South pursue a course that certainly does not help the Negro farmer or agricultural worker. Their influence is so great that the extensive program of the Federal government for agriculture does not benefit the Negro farmer fairly and justly. (That however, is another story and will be told later in this series).

The facts add up to the Negro farmer and agricultural worker suffering from a variety of exploitations, neglect, and unfair disadvantages without being able to even make a mournful noise that can be heard by few to whom it means anything. Those who hear the mournful cries like The National Council on Agricultural Life and Labor, The National Sharecropper Fund, and the National Council of Churches are doing what they can but much more aggressive action on the part of more people is needed if any change in the fortunes of the rural Negro is to come.

(Editor's Note: This is the wrap-up of a series of articles by Dr. Lewis W. Jones, research director, Rural Life Council, Tuskegee Institute, related to the situation of the Negro farmer. The lot of the Negro farmer presents a stabbing challenge to the American conscience. If this series of presentation has moved and disturbed you, then help do something to correct the defects in our farm-life system. Dr. Jones, a specialist in the farm-life field, has given the light you should be able to find a way to help our farm citizens enjoy more fully the blessings of liberty and the heritages of democracy.)

WHAT A RURAL LEADER NEEDS TO KNOW

The leader of rural people today needs to be equipped with information that will make it possible for him to effectively counsel and aid those he would serve. The kind of leader we have in mind does not need technical agricultural knowledge. The farm agent and vocational agriculture teacher can very well supply that. What the leader should have is economic and social action information. Such information is not difficult to acquire and the simple fact that the leader has it and can direct farmers in the use of it will be a big step toward protecting the interests of the farm people he would serve.

The following are the kinds of information the rural leader needs: (1) Tax-supported public services available to rural people. (2) Organizations whose purpose is to aid farmers. (3) The procedures to be followed in using the services of public agencies and private organizations.

PUBLIC SERVICES FOR RURAL PEOPLE

Many, too many, farmers do not know about services available to them from the Federal Government in cooperation with the states. Many of those who have a vague knowledge of the availability of services do not know where to go and how to take advantage of these services. The first fact they should have is that these are tax-provided services and as such are available to any citizen who meets the conditions necessary to qualify for them. The counselor needs to know what the services are and what the qualifications for their use are.

There is much information on federal agencies that may be secured from the agency or from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. General information on the following agencies of the Department of Agriculture may be secured from a single source: (1) Agricultural Conservation Program; (2) Farmer Cooperative Service (3) Agricultural Stabilization; (4) Federal Crop Insurance; (5) Soil Conservation Service; and (6) Farmers Home Administration.

The Source: Directory of Organizations and Field Activities of the Department of Agriculture, 1958; Agricultural Handbook No. 76—For sale by Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. Price 65 cents.

General information on the several agencies of the Farm Credit Administration may also be gotten from a single source. The agencies covered are: (1) Federal Land Banks, Joint Stock Land Banks, and National Farm Loan Associations; (2) Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation; (3) Federal Intermediate Credit Banks; and (4) Production Credit Associations.

The source: Laws Administered by the Farm Credit Administration as Amended to January 1957; Fram Credit Administration Circular 20, Revised, For sale by Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. Price 65 cents.

Every agency has its own information service to which requests may be sent for more detailed information that the two bulletins listed above do not give. There are many of these and the following are listed as suggestive, only; (1) The Federal Land Bank System. How it Operates. Farm Credit Administration Cir. 35, 1957; (2) Financing Farmer Cooperatives. Farmer Cooperative Service, Educational. Circular 5, 1957. Farmer Cooperative Service; and (3) Where and How to Get a Farm. Thirty-three Questions and Answers. Department of Agriculture Leaflet No. 432, May 1958. U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The several agencies also publish periodicals to which a rural leader would do well to subscribe. A suggestive list of these is: (1) The Extension Service Review; Cooperative Extension Service: (2) Soil Conservation, Soil Conservation Service; and (3) The Agricultural Situation.

Below is a listing of categories of farmers interest and agencies that offer some service related to that interest. The rural leader and farmers counselor may write to the information service of any agency requesting the kind of information he wants. That information is almost certain to be contained in a publication which will be sent him or which he will be directed to purchase from the Superintendent of Documents.

Financing Farm Operations. Many farmers depend upon credit for their operating capital. This credit may be secured more cheaply from a public credit agency than from private banks and money lenders. The following agencies provide such credit under conditions prescribed by the agency. (1) Production Credit Associations; (2) Farmers Home Administration; and (3) Federal Land Banks.

Stabilization of Farm Operations. Several agencies of the Department of Agriculture are concerned with the planned operation of farming so as to make it a more stable business and give the farmer greater security. Information may be secured from the Agricultural Conservation and Stabilization Program on, (1) The Soil Bank; and (2) The Price Support Program. In limited areas, some 800 countries, there is a crop insurance program on which information may be secured from the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Farm and Home Improvements. Both technical assistance and financial assistance are available to farmers who desire to improve the farm purchase farm equipment or the farm home. The following agencies offer services for this purpose: (1) Soil Conservation Service; (2) Agricultural Conservation Program; (3) Farmers Home Administration; and (4) Farm Credit Administration.

Farm Purchase. Farmers who want to buy a farm or to buy land in addition to that they are already farming may be assisted in carrying out their plans by the following agencies: (1) The National Farm Loan Association and Federal Land Bank; (2) Farmers Home Administration; and (3) Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.

The leader or counselor should get the necessary information from the appropriate agency and study it carefully. He should know precisely what service the farmer can get. He should know what the farmer himself must do to qualify for the service he wants. He should make these matters clearly understood by the farmer. The leader or counselor should then carefully study the procedures to be followed and guide and aid the farmer in following these procedures even to properly filling out the inevitabe forms the farmer must fill out.

The knowledge the leader and counselor must have includes location of the appropriate office serving the local area of the agency whose service is sought. Not only is the location of the office necessary but it is desirable that the officials who administer the agency's program be identified. This involves finding out who the "committeemen" are who have control of a program at the county or district level.

All underemployed or unemployed rural people should be directed to register at the office of the United States Employment Service most convenient to them.

PRIVATE AGENCIES SERVING RURAL PEOPLE

There are a great many organization whose programs are designed to provide services for rural people. The rural leader should become informed as to what services the several organizations offer and study these with farmers who may want to avail themselves of the services.

Cooperative and Credit Unions. Helpful information can be secured from the Farmer Cooperative Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. In most states helpful information can be secured from the State Agricultural Experiment Station. Information may also be gotten from the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, 744 ackson Pl., Washington, D. C. The rural leader should also visit and get practical advice from an operating Credit Union or Cooperative.

Farmers Organizations. The three major farmers organizati ns are: (1) The Farm Bureau Federation—Largest membership of any of the farmers organizations. Offers information, insurance and other services of value to farmers. Accepts Negro memberships but organizes them in separate auxiliaries. Advantages and disadvantages of membership should be weighed National Headquarters: Room 2300 Merchandise Mart, Chicago 54, Illinois. Information may be secured from state and local offices. (2) The National Farmers Union provides information and services of special value to small farmers. National headquarters: 1575 Shernor St., Denver 3, Colorado. Inquiry may be made concerning state office. (3) The National Grange, 744 Jackson Pl., Washington 1, D. C. (4) National Agricultural Workers Union.

There are also organizations of farmers with common concerns like the Cotton Council, The Dairyman's League, etc. that are of little service to the small farm operator.

Organizations to Serve Farmers. (1) The National Council on Agricultural Life and Labor. The council has representation of 40 organizations that do some work in the interest of rural people. Its research, educational, and legislative services are varied and the rural leader would do well to secure information from the council and become a member. Address: 1751 N. Street N.W., Washington 6, D. C., Howard A. Dawson, President; Miss Elizabeth Herring, Exectuive Secrtary. (2) The National Council of Churches has action programs to aid farmers and rural people. Ad-Address :297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York. (3) Denominational boards for rural service. Practically all major church organizations have in their Department of Home Missions o ras a separate division, a program for work among rural people. Inquiry should be addressed to the National headquarters of th echurch. (4) The National Sharecropper Fund. Informational and educational services. Lobby for legislation favorable to small farmers. Interests varied. Other services. Address: 112 East 19th Street, New York, N. Y.; Dr. Frank P. Graham, Chairman; Miss Fay Bennett, Executive Secretary.

Inquiry to any of these organizations in relation to a specific problem would bring useful information to the rural leader. There are special committees organized to work specific farm problems and these organizations can advise concerning the work of these.

The modern rural leader needs to know a great deal because agricultural and rural life are much more complex than a generation ago. The farmer's interests are not isolated but mesh into many economic and political concerns and activities. Effective action on the part of the rural leader requires a highly intelligent sophistication.

The rural Negro in his efforts to improve his condition must above all show a willingness to accept his responsibilities as a citizen including payment of taxes, serving on juries and voting.

For Information For Action

Atlanta World

In his wrap-up of a series of articles on the situation of the Negro farmer, Dr. Lewis W. Jones, research director, Rural Life Council, Tuskegee Institute, has formulated a list of sources where the rural leader may secure information, service and counsel.

Atlanta Daily

Legislation can never be a substitute for leadership. The crying need in the plight of the Negro farmer is enlightened, rugged, dedicated, and fearless leadership. On-the-scene leadership is needed together with bold government leadership. Without creative leadership tied in with the strength of urban leadership the Negro farmer will not be able to overcome the obstacles now impeding him.

June 7-8-58

Given the information, bolstered with the know-how to apply it, and the daring to try it, the Negro farmer can fight back to the road to a better life, and eventual happiness.

A report of the Committee for a National Trade Policy released June 17 claims that the Uinted States "export trade brings some $145.1 million into the economy of Alabama each year, representing fulltime jobs for at least 5,291 workers in Alabama's seven principal industries. . . ."

D-6

How the Negro farmer shares in this export-trade-made job force we do not know. He, the Negro farmer, does not share fully we know for certain, in the political affairs; in the agricultural economy, and in the freedom streams of Alabama life. With the tools of information and the inspiration to bring forward leadership the Negro farmer can help to shape for himself a new future. Leadership is not likely to be rained down from the skies.

Dr. Jones has played his part as the scholar-leader, the fact-finder and guide, and as a source of inspiration. He has charted a course of action and challenge the leaders. He has performed his duty, we think, as a scholar in action.

"Fannie and Carolyn left Baghdad on yesterday afternoon for Rome, Italy. Our government decided to evacuate the women and children from here and have the technicians to remain. We do not know. . .how long they will remain in Rome.

"I, along with the other technicians (American) am getting along very well. We have not suffered any difficulties since the change in the form of government im Iraq.

"This has been my first experience with such a change in government and the limited amount of excitement has been very pleasantly surprising to me . . . .

"To those of us who go to church on Sunday evenings that is the only high thing we are missing as there are not many big crowds being gathered in any shape or form.

"Please tell all of our friends that I am all right and Fannie and Carolyn are now in Rome, Italy."

Tuskegee Chaplain Warns Audience To Become Christ-like

Globe p. 8

Mon 10-13-58

Nashville Tenn

GREENSBORO, N. C. — There are no short cuts to succes and achievement, an audience at A&T College was warned last Sunday.

The warning came from Dr. Daniel W. Wynn, chaplain of Tuskegee Institute at Tuskegee, Ala, who delivered the sermon at the regular chapel services in Harrison Auditorium.

"All men of note, all women of note," he said, 'have come to their places through long, patiene, consistent and Christ-like effort.'"

Developing his message around the experiences of Christ as he was exposed to temptation to gain prestige through short and easy methods was one of the three he described. He listed "yield to nature" as another serious temptation of the day and urged his audience to clear, clean cut decisions between the desires of the body and rationilization of the mind.

"The temptation to gain success through wrong standards is, too often, the rule of the day," he said. He said the rules of Christianity are based on the high principles of love, sincerity and brotherhood and "we must early learn that self-preservation ranks far down the list of high human calling."

Dr. Wynn was introduced by Rev. Cleo M. McCoy, director of Religious activities. A graduate of Langston University in Oklahoma, he received further training at the Howard University School of Religion and Boston University.

Other persons appearing on the program included: David L. Price, president of the Fortnightly Club, prayer and Felicia Black, scripture lesson.

LOCAL AND ALUMNI AUTHORS

As we celebrate National Library Week it is well to recall that a number of book have been written by alumni and faculty members of Tuskegee Institute. Dr. Washington wrote 14 books, edited two volumes and contributed to three more. His successor, Dr. Moton, wrote Finding a Way Out (1920) and What the Negro Thinks (1929). President Emeritus Frederick D. Patterson was joint editor of Robert Russa Moton of Hampton and Tuskegee (1956) and contributor to What the Negro Wants (1944).

Other faculty authors include Dr. J. E. Fuller (Mathematics for Students of General Education, 1947); Dr. I. A. Derbigny (General Education in the Negro College, 1947); Dr. Clarence T. Mason (The Scientific Aspects of Knowledge,1938); Mr. Thomas H. McCormick (General Applied Science ..., 1953); Dr. D. W. Wynn (The NAACP versus Negro Revolutionary Protest, 1955); and (The Chaplain Speaks, 1956); Dean Hattie W. Kelly and Dr. Harry J. Romm (The Adventures of Jerry: a Science Reader, 1943, illustrated by Reginald Morris, an alumnus); Dr. Stanley H. Smith (Freedom to Work, 1955); The Rev. Vinson A. Edwards (Five County Church Study in East Alabama, 1955); and A Handbook of Plans and Programs for the Community Council, 1956).

At least two alumni have written novels. George Wylie Henderson is the author of Ollie Miss (1935) and Jule (1946). Ralph Ellison, generally considered one of the three most important young American novelists, won the 1952 National Book Award for Invisible Man. Other alumni authors include Thomas M. Campbell, Sr. (The Movable School Goes to the Negro Farmer, 1936); William H. Pipes (Say Amen, Brother, 1951); and Nathaniel J. Washington (Historical Development of the Negro in Oklahoma, 1948).

This brief listing, which does not pretend to be exhaustive, should not end without mention of the Negro Year Book, first published in 1912 by Dr. Monroe Work (compiler of the famous Bibliography of the Negro in Africa and America, 1928) and continued under the editorship of Mrs. Jessie P. Guzman. Mrs. Guzman was also editor of The New South and Higher Education (1954), the proceedings of the symposium held during the inauguration of President L. H. Foster.

DR. LEWIS W. JONES SPEAKS ON APPALACHIAN MOUNTAIN PROJECT 4-16-58 Washington Post, Atla, Ga.

Dr. Lewis W. Jones spoke to the class in the Georgraphy of North America. His topic was "The Southern Appalachian Mountain Project".

The long-range objective of the project, he says, is to prepare these mountain people not only for living at home, but for adjustment in areas to which they might migrate.

Short-range objectives include the improvement of educational opportunities; improvement in health and sanitation; the stimulation of industrial development so as to increase the income; and to improve the quality of living of those who prefer to remain in their mountain homes.

RURAL LIFE AND AGRICULTURE

World
Birmingham Ala.

BY LEWIS W. JONES

(Editor's Note: — This is the fourth in a series of seven articles by Dr. Lewis W. Jones, director of Research Rural Life Council and professor of sociology at Tuskegee Institute. Mr. ones is an authority on farm and rural life as related to the Negro group. He is a former editor of the Houston (Texas) Informer and an eminent specialist in field research. This is one of the most illuminating series of articles that has been written recently that treats this brutal, disturbing and unmet farm problem in a bold, frank, and understandable way.

Number 4

SMALL FARMER SMALLER OPPORTUNITY

Nobody mourns the disappearance of the Sharecropper. In all of the years that the cropper's unfortunate situation was described and his rank exploitation was documented nothing was done to improve that status. The status itself had to disappear as a result of economic developments rather than by social action.

DR. JONES

There are a great many tenants still operating farms in the South.

In 1950, there were 905,000 tenant farms in the South. These were 34 percent of all farms. This was a decrease from 56 percent of all farms in the South in 1930. Negro tenants did not decrease at the same rate as whites nor did Negro owned farms increase at the same rate as whites When the 1954 agricultural Census was taken, in the deep South states the majority of Negro farmers were still tenants

The percentage of Negro farmers who were tenants in five deep South states were as follows:

Alabama	60
Georgia	69
Louisiana	62
Mississippi	72
South Carolina	60

The tenancy status may not be said to have improved greatly. Tenants in the South still do not have leases and hold their tenure under verbal agreements for one year. As the number of tenant farms decreases the competition for those remaining is keener.

In the ten years between 1945 and 1954 the percentage decreases in Negro farm tenants were:

Alabama	43
Georgia	53
Louisiana	43
Mississippi	36
South Carolina	35

While more than one-third of Negro farm tenants gave up their farms in the ten-year period there was no like increase in Negro owners.

Census figures on the increase in farms operated by owners in the South do not mean that all of these are new farms acquired by people who formerly were tenants. Some were, but many were farms from which tenants had been dismissed because machinery made it possible for the owner of the land to cultivate it without using tenants.

For eleven states the trend in owner-operated farms between 1945 and 1954 was:

State	*WO	NO
Alabama	2,543	26
Louisiana	7,037	957
Mississippi	7,254	2,400
South Carolina	4,013	3,697
North Carolina	3,599	2,794
Arkansas	-11,632	-1,601
Florida	5,210	-1,981
Georgia	4,192	- 303
Texas	-19,095	-3,147
Tennessee	- 4,711	- 165
Virginia	-15,834	-7,152
TOTAL	-17,514	-4,399

*White Owners
Negro Owners

The total number of acres in white owner operated farms increased in this ten-year period by 40 million acres. The total number of acres in Negro owner operated farms in this period decreased by 20 thousand acres.

(The next article will epxlain why the Negro farm tenant and Negro farm owner fare as poorly as they do.)

RURAL LIFE AND AGRICULTURE

By LEWIS W. JONES

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the sixth in a series of seven articles on the rural life of the Negro farm group written by Dr. Lewis W. Jones. He is director of Research Rural Life Council and professor of sociology at Tuskegee Institute. An outstanding authority in his field, Dr. Jones has compressed into this series of articles, factual, first-hand, authenic information on some of the actual conditions of the Negro farm group. It is a shocking revelation written in a simple, non-professional, down-to-earth style. What can you, the government, civic leadership in the city do to help solve these socio-freedom problems of the Negro farm group?)

Number 6

STRANDED

The Census reports a category of the population as "Rural Nonfarm." These are people who live in rural areas but who do not depend upon agriculture for a livelihood. Most of them live in very small towns and villages. Many are people who have been dispossessed from farms by machinery and cattle. Instead of going immediately to cities to seek employment they stop in nearby small places. Some are employed in industry. Others in trade, the service occupations, and other nonfarm pursuits. A well-known fact that has been reported by economists is the little opportunity Negroes have for employment in the new industries in the South. Negroes who are employed in trade are largely laborers, janitors, deliverymen, etc. Most of them find employment in construction work and personal and domestic service.

Non-industrial employment in small towns is poor-paying at best and often precarious of tenure. In this day of labor-saving devices domestic and personal servants are a luxury that might be dispensed with. Many Negro workers who earn the small wages of service employees also work in agriculture as "seasonal laborers." They go out to nearby farms when the demand for labor is great and cultivate and harvest crops for a few weeks.

These rural nonfarm Negroes are "economically marginal" which is to say that in a period of recession they could easily be dispensed with. They are underemployed and being so do not receive a living wage for their work.

Where the rural nonfarm Negro lives may be regarded as a "critical area" of race relations. These small towns and villages are most insistent upon preserving the old ways. It is these places that murder and violence occurs when a Negro tries to reject the old ways. It is in these places that intimidation and economic pressure are used most effectively. Anyone interested in the future of Negroes should keep his attention on these little places of the South.

Few leaders of Negroes develop in these small places. The school teachers, preachers, and an occasional Negro in business know very well that they cannot remain where they are if they protest or become active in any movement to improve the status of Negroes. Professional Negroes in these situations do what they can but that is precious little.

In 1950 there were 2 1-3 million Negroes classified as rural nonfarm. The number of rural non-farm Negroes will depend upon opportunity to move on to cities which would reduce their number and the movement from the farms which would increase their number if more came in than go out.

"PUSHED OUT"

In a recent speech before the Southern Research Institute, as reported in the daily press, R. E. Paxton, office manager of Gaylord Corporation, Bogalusa, La. is quoted as saying:

"The little farmer is being pushed out by the large mechanized farms. His land will go for trees."

Dr. Lewis W. Jones, research director of the Rural Life Council, Tuskegee Institute, has a series of articles currently appearing in this newspaper which discussed the problems of the Negro farmer, who is one of "the little farmers."

Mr. Paxton is reported as saying further: "The South is expanding at such a rate it will soon become necessary to tap the labor forces of other sections."

If pushed off the farms by trees, what happens to the Negro farm worker? Does he become a part of this new active urban "labor force"? How does this "pushed farm" relate to the so-called migration, vanishing farmer, unhired man in this South where "it will soon become necessary to tap the labor force of other sections"?

Dr. Jones in his series of articles tries to point up the actual status of the Negro farmer. He shows how the welfare of the Negro farmer has a bearing on the advancement of the urban Negro worker. His scholarly, yet down-to-earth presentation of this problem is a valuable production. This series of articles should be widely and deeply read.

THE DOCUMENT listed 25 individuals, including several for whom he neglected to list a bequest, as well as a number of organizations.

It also set up several trusts, as well as gave directions to return his body to Tuskegee and bury it beside that of his first wife, and for a marker to be placed at the graves of Mrs. Imes; and her first husband, the late William McCard.

Dr. Imes willed the Druid Hill Ave. property to the Moral Rearmament Movement, designating it as a center for the Baltimore area.

THE JOHN A. ANDREW MEMORIAL HOSPITAL -- CRIPPLED CHILDREN'S SERVICE--RECEIVES GIFT

Reports are in on the modest but heart-warming project undertaken for the Month of November by the Rev. R. V. Vines of Alexander City to have the members of his four churches contribute to the Crippled Children's Service at Tuskegee's John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital. A total of $44.55 was given by 137 contributors.

Daily Advertiser Sheet

The Rev. Vines told Dr. Dibble, Medical Director at the Hospital that his people had given to unorganized charity often without thanks or visible signs of aid rendered He pointed out the case of one of his young members who came to the Crippled Children's Service to have a deformity corrected and is now a healthy youth playing football at the Council High School in Dadeville, Alabama.

Wed. 12-3-58 Tuskegee Inst, Ala.

There are many lessons to be learned from this project. Rev. Vines has stressed modern medical care to his people. They have found great joy in giving to help others. One boy gave one penny but his gift was just as precious as those who had more to give. Then, there was the lesson of keeping records. Each church listed the names of donors and each church received an official receipt from Tuskegee Institute for its gift. Rev. Vines has decided to make this an annual project for Thanksgiving and plans to encourage other pastors in his group to do the same.

Churches participating and the amount given were as follows: New Hope Baptist Church, West Point, Ga.--$14.40; Shady Grove Baptist Church, Jackson Gap, Ala.--$6.70; Cross Key Baptist Church, Alexander City, Ala.--$6.30; and Mt. Zion East Baptist Church, Dadeville, Ala.--$17.15.

New Drug Is Reported At Tuskegee

Skin Specialist Says It Helps Stop Itching

TUSKEGEE, April 15 (AP)—Doctors attending a medical conference at Tuskegee Institute heard an encouraging report today on a new drug which is taken internally to stop itching in the skin.

A Montgomery skin specialist, Dr. Irving D. London, told his colleagues the drug, administered in the form of a pill, has produced significant, even dramatic results in the experimental stage.

But he cautioned delegates attending the annual meeting of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society that:

1. The experiments are still going and much remains to be done.

2. The drug isn't a cure but merely a method of treating severe itching conditions.

London emphasized, too, that the drug, known as trimeprozine, isn't even on the market yet and cannot be purchased at drugstores.

The Montgomery physician said he has tested the treatment on two groups of patients and that in both instances, more than 77 per cent of those receiving the drug reported excellent to good results.

Others have experimented with trimeprozine before, but London said he undertook the first double blind test which doctors consider more nearly foolproof.

A double blind experiment is one in which neither the doctor nor the patient knows until the test is concluded whether any one individual took the drug itself or a simple sugar-coated pill called a placebo.

With that type of research, London explained, there is less possibility that the patient will merely imagine he is improving, and an enthusiastic doctor is less likely to read something into the experiment that isn't there.

London said the power of suggestion works effectively in clearing up itching conditions. But he said his experiments indicate the new drug is much better.

Illustrating how the mental attitude can work, he said 44 per cent of the patients who took only sugar pills during one experiment reported improvement in their conditions.

METHOD REPORTED FOR SAFE PLASMA

Chicagoan Tells of Success in Ending Jaundice Risk After 10-Year Research

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., April 15—A method for producing blood plasma without the risk of transmitting the jaundice virus was reported tonight.

Dr. J. Garrott Allen, professor of surgery at the University of Chicago School of Medicine, made the report at the annual meeting of the John A. Andrews Clinical Society at Tuskegee Institute.

He said the development might lead to the re-use of plasma, which in effect was banned in 1951. The National Research Council at that time directed that its manufacture be subject to a label declaring that its use entailed the risk of jaundice.

Dr. Allen emphasized that "blood plasma is the backbone of preparedness for civilian and military mass casualty treatment, and therefore fundamental to the development of a national blood storage program which, in my opinion, has been absent in this country for almost a decade."

Painstaking Effort

About 500 medical health personnel from thirty-eight states are attending the five-day conference. It is aimed at fostering interracial and intersectional relationships in the medical profession by aiding the needy sick of the rural South.

Dr. Allen delivered the memorial lecture in honor of Dr. Charles R. Drew, Negro physician and wartime authority on blood plasma who died in an automobile accident in 1951.

He unfolded a dramatic story of painstaking laboratory work over a ten-year period, in which he got results by "simply turning the tables on the accepted method of preserving a virus, and thereby gaining a technique for killing a virus."

Plasma-induced jaundice is caused by a virus in the plasma or blood of the donor, which is manifested 145 to 150 days after a transfustion, he explained.

Describes Hazards

Studies showed that "perfectly healthy people, with no history of jundice or liver disease, often carry this virus which could conterminate a whole bank of plasma and produce the jaundice in about one out of every four plasma recipients," he said.

The main contamination hazard, he said, lies in the pooling of individual donations of plasma to get a uniform product, which multiplies the chances of contamination by the carrier donor.

He said that one in fifty donors apparently were virus carriers, and that plasma usually was pooled in sizes of 500 to 1,000 donors.

The great stumbling block, he said, was that the jaundice virus could not be transmitted from humans to animals for laboratory studies, and no method existed in the laboratory for detecting in the blood of the donor that he was a virus carrier.

Moreover, he continued, the jaundice virus was found to be so stable and hardy that it withstood the usual methods of killing a virus.

After a long study of the history of smallpox and yellow fever vaccine development, Dr. Allen said, he noted that virologists tried to preserve a virus by refrigerating or drying it, because if it remained in a liquid state at room temperatures it could not survive.

Therefore, he said, he decided to turn the tables by putting the plasma "in a situation most favorable to drive out the virus naturally." Essential to this project, he added, was the knowledge obtained over the years that plasma proteins could remain stable for seventeen years on a storage shelf.

Doctors Sued in Blood Case

TULSA, Okla., April 15 (AP)—Five physicians here have been named in a $1,134,000 suit filed by a mother who held that their alleged negligence had led to her child's mental retardation.

Mrs. Eddie McKim charged that the doctors had failed to determine that her blood type would subject her 7-month-old child to jaundice.

King talks on freedom

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — "We must use first class methods to gain first class citizenship.

"Human progress is never inevitable and that struggle and sacrifice must be the lot of those who would move forward in this new age."

The Rev. Dr. Martin L. King Jr. of Montgomery, Ala., was addressing the annual John A. Kenney Memorial Banquet here in making those statements.

SOME 700 PERSONS attended the affair honoring Dr. Morgan E. Norris, a co-founder of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society and a Kilmarnock, Va. physician.

Some of the nation's leading specialists appeared on the professional lecture series. Included were:

Dr. Nolan D. C. Lewis, director of research, New Jersey Neuro - Psychiatric Institute; Dr. J. G. Allen, professor of surgery, University Of Chicago;

Dr. Carrol M. Leevy, director of clinical investigation, New Jersey Medical Center, New Jersey, and Dr. Roland B. Scott, director of the department of pediatrics, Howard University.

The Tuskegee Institute banquet was followed by the election of officers of the clinic. New and re-elected officers installed were;

Dr. J. D. Merida, Cleveland, president, succeeding Dr. Maurice F. Rabb of Louisville, Ky.; Dr. John W. Chenault, Bradenton, Fla., president-elect;

Dr. Eugene H. Dibble Jr., secretary and Louis A. Rabb, manager - treasurer.

TUSKEGEE PLANS A CANCER CLINIC

Institute Facility Will Serve Indigent in Rural Alabama —To Open in 3 Months

Special to The New York Times.

TUSKEGEE, Ala, April 19—A cancer clinic at Tuskegee Institute to serve the needy sick of the surrounding rural area will be established in about three months.

Dr. Eugene H. Dibble Jr., medical director of Tuskegee Institute, reports that the clinic "will get off to a modest start with emphasis on cancer detection and education so essential to the needs of our rural people remote from medical facilities."

"Because of Tuskegee's long history in providing special attention to rural health problems, we are confident that private and Government agencies will eventually support us in expanding this project to include teaching and research facilities," Dr. Dibble said.

Dr. James B. Mason, assistant director of the American College of Surgeons, visited the campus this week to study problems involved in opening the clinic and to advise on methods of setting it up to conform with accrediting agency standards.

Grant Aids Work

Dr. Mason conferred with the institute's faculty, the medical staff of the campus hospital and members of the George Washington Carver Foundation Research Center, which has a Damon Runyon Foundation grant to study certain aspects of plant cancer.

The new facility, to be known as the Mary Willard Hall Cancer Clinic, will open with equipment adequate for the detection of cancerous growths and for the application of deep X-ray therapy. An anonymous donor has provided the funds for clinical equipment and the use of 100 milligrams of radium.

Dr. Dibble said that the campus project was being coordinated with the Alabama State Health Department under Dr. D. G. Gill and the Alabama Division of the American Cancer Society, under Mrs. Lillian G. Meade.

The medical director said that he was hopeful of getting funds that would enable the clinic's program eventually to encompass the teaching, research and clinic-education fields. The institute already has many special medical facilities.

Dr. Dibble noted that for teaching and clinical experience the campus had thirty-five staff physicians, that ten resident doctors were assigned to the hospital each year and that the school of nursing enrolled 125 students.

In the field of research, Dr. Dibble cited Tuskegee's role in conducting since 1932 a continuing study of untreated syphilis, with emphasis on cardiovascular defects, under the auspices of the United States Public Health Service.

Mrs. Eunice Rivers Laurie, a Tuskegee graduate nurse, was given the Public Health Service's Distinguished Service Award this week in Washington for her "outstanding service" on the untreated syphilis program.

Tuskegee also provides the pathological obstetrical work for a six-county program designed to reduce the mortality and morbidity rates among Negro mothers and children. This program is operated in cooperation with the Alabama State Board of Health and the United States Children's Bureau.

Tuskegee's medical facilities also direct a rural crippled children's clinic and a vocational rehabilitation center under the supervision of Dr. John F. Hume, chief of orthopedic services.

"On the basis of this record," Dr. Dibble said, "it is our expectation that the new cancer clinic will serve as a demonstration project of what can be done in this field in the future for the rural South."

Itching Skin Combatant Drug Disclosed At Tuskegee Meet

TUSKEGEE (AP)—Doctors attending a medical conference at Tuskegee Institute heard an encouraging report Tuesday on a new drug which is taken internally to stop itching in the skin.

A Montgomery skin specialist, Dr. Irving D. London, told his colleagues the drug, administered in the form of a pill, has produced significant, even dramatic results in the experimental stage.

But he cautioned delegates attending the annual meeting of the John A. Andrews Clinical Society that:

1. The experiments are still going and much remains to be done.

2. The drug isn't a cure but merely a method of treating severe itching conditions.

London emphasized, too, that the drug, known as Trimeprozine, isn't even on the market yet and cannot be purchased at drugstores.

TREATMENT TESTED

The Montgomery physician said he has tested the treatment on two groups of patients and that in both instances, more than 77 per cent of those receiving the drug reported excellent to good results.

Others have experimented with trimeprozine before, but London said he undertook the first double blind test which doctors consider more nearly foolproof.

A double blind experiment is one in which neither the doctor nor the patient knows until the test is concluded whether any one individual took the drug itself or a simple sugar-coated pill called a Placebo.

With that type of research London explained, there is less possibility that the patient will merely imagine he is improving and an enthusiastic doctor is less likely to read something into the experiment that isn't there.

London said the power of suggestion works effectively in clearing up itching conditions. But he said his experiments indicate the new drug is much better.

Illustrating how the mental attitude can work, he said 44 per cent of the patients who took only sugar pills during one experiment reported improvement in their conditions.

The medical men were told by another speaker that 20 per cent of young patients have been found to have allergies.

Dr. Roland B. Scott, head of the Department of Pediatrics, Howard University College of Medicine, Washington, D.C., was the speaker. Scott said large cities needed allergy clinics for detection and treatment of childhood allergies.

At the annual Charles R. Drew Lecture Tuesday night, Dr. J. Garrott Allen, professor of surgery, University of Chicago, told physicians that a simple discovery which stores blood plasma in the liquid state at room temperature "solved the baffling problem of jaundice-producing effects of blood plasma."

Dr. Allen said a serious outbreak of jaundice in 1942, traced to the use of improperly stored plasma, caused all plasma to be banned. The similarity of yellow fever symptoms and those of jaundice baffled medical men until the investigation, which he conducted, Allen said.

It was announced Tuesday night by Dr. Eugene H. Dibble Jr., medical director at Tuskegee Institute and secretary of the clinica society, that plans were taking shape for establishment here of the Mary Willard Hall tumor clinic.

Dibble said Dr. James B. Mason, assistant director, American College of Surgeons, had been on the campus this week to advise on methods for setting up the clinic to conform with accrediting agency standards.

The program is being coordinated with state health officer Dr. D. G. Gill and Mrs. Lillian G. Meade, director of the Alabama Division, American Cancer Society.

200 Hear Doctors Discuss Medical Topics At Tuskegee

By DON McKEE
Advertiser Staff Editor

TUSKEGEE — Nearly 200 medical men attended the opening session of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society at Tuskegee Institute Monday as lecturers discussed psychiatry, arterial diseases and other clinical subjects.

Physicians, dentists and guests attending the 46th annual meeting of the society heard lectures by 10 physicians in the auditorium of the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital.

The application of psychiatry to non-psychiatric practice was discussed by Dr. Nolan D. C. Lewis, director of research, New Jersey Neuro-Psychiatric Institute, Princeton, N.J.

Lewis told guests at the C. V. Roman Public Health meeting Sunday night that "the recent expanse of the use of tranquilizers in the treatment of mental disease poses one of the greatest fields of investigation and study by researchers." The health meeting is held each year in tribute to the late Dr. C. V. Roman, cofounder of the clinical society.

TRANQUILIZER STUDY

While tranquilizers are a potent tool in the treatment of mental illness, much needs to be learned about their effects on body chemistry and the nervous system, Lewis said.

Electrical methods of brain study and a new electron-microscope which magnifies brain cells promise further developments in the study of mental disorders, he said. Of the growing mental disease problem, Lewis said, "its economic loss alone is a serious drain on our nation, not counting the human anguish which follows in its wake."

Dr. Harold Johnson of Falls Church, Va., told the group Monday that the general practitioner should obtain adequate medical equipment for diagnostic purposes. Discussng the "Business Side of Medical Practice," Johnson said physicians should be careful to employ well-trained and efficient receptionists who "see the humanitarian side" of medical practice. He warned doctors of a growing number of malpractice suits growing out of fee collection efforts.

MONDAY HIGH LIGHT

One of the high lights of Monday afternoon's session was a discussion by Dr. H. S. Van Ordstrand, head of the Department of Pulmonary Diseases, Cleveland Clinic, Cleveland, Ohio.

Ordstrand, using film slides to illustrate, showed the medical men how be diagnosed and treated lesions of the lungs. He said the solitary pulmonary nodule, called "coin lesions" or "shadow lesions," are frequently difficult to define in X-rays and noted that exploratory surgery is often necessary for diagnosis.

Other speakers on Monday's program included Dr. W. E. Lewis, chief of Psychiatry and Neurology Service, Veterans Administration Hospital, Tuskegee; Dr. Thomas M. Mier, obstetrics and gynecology, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. R. T. Smoot, Department of Internal Medicine, VA Hospital, Tuskegee; Dr. Mitchell W. Spellman, assistant professor of surgery, Howard University College of Medicine, Washington, D.C.; Dr. Carroll M. Leevy, Jersey City Medical Center, Jersey City, N.J.; Dr. James T. Montgomery, Birmingham, and Dr. Levi S. Kirkland, Tuskegee.

DREW LECTURE

Another high light of the meeting will be the Charles R. Drew Memorial Lecture at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Dr. J. Garrott Allen, professor of surgery, University of Chicago, will speak on "Observation on Homologous Serum Jaundice and the Usefulness of Plasma."

A clinical pathological conference is scheduled from 8 to 9 a.m. Tuesday with Dr. J. C. Ashhurst of the Tuskegee VA Hospital and John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital, presiding and Dr. Van Ordstrand as the discussant.

TUSKEGEE—Plans for a medical survey of Africa and southern Asia this summer by a four-specialists were announced here Thursday.

Dr. Robert A. Hingson, professor of anesthesia at Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio, announced the survey plans to medical men attending the 54th annual meeting of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society at Tuskegee Institute.

ANNISTON NATIVE

Hingson, a native of Anniston, Ala., will be one of the members of the survey team. The anesthesia specialist has been a U.S. Public Health Service officer for the past 16 years.

Other members of the group will include Dr. Stanley Olson, dean of Baylor University Medical School, Houston, Tex., and a former associate director of Mayo Clinic; Dr. John G. P. Cleland, surgeon and obstetrician and operator of a clinic in Portland, Ore., and Dr. Charles Black, tuberculosis specialist, Baton Rouge, La.

The survey is sponsored by the Baptist World Alliance in cooperation with seven other churches Hingson said.

The physicians will make a tour of inspection of all major medical missions in southern Asia and all of Africa; "render a teaching service through patient clinics," and set up "the machinery for a voluntary physicians pool," Hingson said.

POOL OF 300 DOCTORS

The Cleveland specialist said plans are for a pool of 300 doctors "who will be ready at a moment's notice to render a three-month service in areas of the greatest human need."

Hingson said the physicians in the voluntary pool would serve without compensation. The doctors would be available in the event a missionary in Africa was suddenly taken from his work by illness or other cause, he said.

The four-man pilot team will "take the most recent advances in American medicine" to Asia and Africa, Hingson said, and most needed in those countries at present are "methods to control pain in surgery and childbirth," and provide mass inoculation.

A jet injector, of which Hingson was one of the inventors, will be taken on the tour for mass inoculation. The device can inoculate up to 1,000 persons an hour without refill, Hingson said.

The group will address the World Medical Assn. in San Francisco, Calif., June 25 and then depart the following day on their tour. The tour will be three and one-half months long.

Hingson said the medical service rendered to Africans and Asians might be valuable making allies of the nations of those countries.

New officers of the clinical society will be installed at the closing session Friday. Dr. J. D Merida, Cleveland, Ohio, president-elect, will assume the duties of his office, succeeding Dr. Maurice F. Rabb, Louisville, Ky.

Other officers are Dr. Eugene H. Dibble, medical director of John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital, re-elected secretary, and Louis A. Rabb, John A. Andrew Hospital administrator, re-elected manager-treasurer.

Leaders in Campaign Against Polio Are Honored at Warm Springs

At the ceremony opening the Hall of Fame in Georgia yesterday were, from the left: Dr. Thomas M. Rivers, Dr. Charles Armstrong, Dr. John R. Paul, Dr. Albert B. Sabin, Dr. Thomas Francis Jr., Dr. Joseph L. Melnick (partly hidden), Dr. Isabel Morgan, Dr. Howard A. Howe, Dr. David Bodian, Dr. Jonas E. Salk and Basil O'Connor. The bronze busts of these pioneers against polio are arranged in the same order, except that at the left is that of the late Dr. Karl Landsteiner and at top right is the one of the late President Roosevelt, founder of the polio foundation. Also, below and to the left of the Roosevelt bust is one of Dr. John F. Enders, who was ill and not present.

NEW HALL OF FAME HAILS POLIO FIGHT

Foundation Unveils Busts of Roosevelt, Salk and 15 Others at Warm Springs

MARKS 20TH BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Roosevelt Praises Role of Vaccine—O'Connor Sees New Conquests of Disease

By BESS FURMAN
Special to The New York Times.

WARM SPRINGS, Ga., Jan. 2—The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis today opened a two-day celebration of its twentieth anniversary by dedicating a polio Hall of Fame.

Honored by bronze busts were seventeen men and women who had played leading roles in the successful fight to control paralytic polio. Among those whose busts were unveiled in a quadrangle of the Warm Springs Foundation were the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, a polio sufferer, and Dr. Jonas E. Salk, who developed the polio vaccine.

On a television program before the dedication ceremonies, Mrs. Roosevelt acclaimed the speed with which the foundation, started by her husband, had developed a vaccine to control the disease that crippled him.

At a dinner tonight, Basil O'Connor, president of the foundation from its start, predicted new conquests of many diseases.

The day's events included contributions from New York, President Roosevelt's native state, and from Warm Springs, where he regained his strength after his polio attack. The President was fatally stricken in "the little White House" at Warm Springs on April 12, 1945.

TV Tour of Cottage

Dave Garroway brought his "Today" television program from New York City for Mrs. Roosevelt's message.

This morning's dedication was attended by eleven of the twelve honored persons who are still living.

In a dedicatory address, William Fay first read the roll of the four deceased scientists honored by busts. They were:

Dr. Jacob von Heine of Stuttgart, Germany, who first described polio clearly in 1840.

Dr. Oskar Medin of Stockholm, who, in 1907, first recognized it as an acute infection.

Dr. Iver Wickman, also of Sweden, a pioneer in 1909 in studying polio as an epidemic.

Dr. Karl Landsteiner of Vienna, who demonstrated in 1909 that polio could be transmitted to an experimental animal.

11 Scientists Honored

Mr. Fay, a trustee of both the Warm Springs and national polio foundations, then read the roll of eleven living scientists being honored. They were:

Dr. Salk.

Thomas M. Rivers, medical director of the polio foundation and chairman of the committee that supervised the successful 1954 field trials of Salk vaccine.

Dr. Charles Armstrong, retired research worker of the United States Public Health Service, who in 1939 discovered that certain strains of polio virus could be transmitted to cotton rats.

Dr. John R. Paul, Yale University virologist, who contributed significantly to knowledge of the disease.

Dr. Albert B. Sabin of Cincinnati University, leader in the search for a live virus vaccine.

Dr Thomas Francis Jr., University of Michigan epidemiologist, who directed the 1954-55 evaluation program demonstrating the safety and effectiveness of Salk vaccine.

Dr. Joseph L. Melnick of the National Institutes of Health, who as a Yale University scientist studied polio incidence and immunity in many parts of the inactivated with formaldehyde world.

Dr. Isabel Morgan of Columbia University, who at Johns Hopkins University prepared an experimental vaccine from virus inactivated with formaldhyde and with it protected monkeys against paralytic polio.

Dr. Howard A. Howe of Johns Hopkins, first to show that chimpanzees could acquire polio infection by mouth.

Dr. David Bodian of Johns Hopkins, who proved that polio could be blocked by antibodies in the blood before reaching the central nervous system.

Dr. John F. Enders of the Children's Medical Center, Boston, who won the Nobel Prize for discovering a method for growing polio virus in non-nervous tissue.

All but Dr. Enders, who is ill, were at the ceremonies.

2 Nonscientists Hailed

Mr. Fay then read the names of the two nonscientists honored —President Roosevelt and Mr. O'Connor.

The unveiling revealed a wall of Georgia marble on which the bronzes were mounted in informal groups.

All the bursts were the work of Edmond Romulus Amateis, creator of many memorials. The busts were cast in a foundry at Corona, Queens, that has been in business for more than a century.

In his speech, Mr. O'Connor predicted that further virus and cell research would help to conquer many diseases, possibly including cancer.

EXPANSION OF ACTIVITIES

Polio Foundation Plans To Fight Other Killers

NEW YORK, July 22 (UPI)—The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, a giant fund-raising organization which led the victorious fight against polio, announced today that it is turning its attention to other dread killers and cripplers of mankind.

Foundation President Basil O'Connor said the organization would be known in the future simply as the National Foundation and would expand its activities to take in all the virus diseases, arthritis, diseases of the central nervous system and the congenital diseases known as "birth defects."

O'Connor said the foundation also will continue its war against polio until every American is protected by the Salk vaccine and there no longer are any polio victims to treat.

Disband or Expand

But he said the vaccine perfected by Dr. Jonas E. Salk after years of research by foundation-backed teams has brought total victory over polio in sight, leaving the vast 3,100-chapter foundation with the choice of either disbanding or expanding its horizons.

The virus diseases include the common cold and the various strains of influenza, which have killed millions. Diseases of the central nervous system include such cripplers as cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis and myasthenia gravis, all of which already have smaller foundations concentrating on conquering them.

O'Connor said these, with arthritis, rheumatism and the congenital diseases, were picked by the foundation for its new work because they related to fields which polio researchers invaded in their fight to conquer infantile paralysis.

Basil O'Connor To Speak Here

Basil O'Connor, president of The National Foundation will be the featured speaker at the seventh annual meeting of the state March of Dimes advisory committee.

A luncheon is scheduled to be held Wednesday, Dec. 3, at 12 o'clock in the Victory Room of Heidelberg Hotel.

O'Connor has been president of the National Foundation (formerly called the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis) since its inception 21 years ago.

The former law partner of the late president, Franklin D. Roosevelt, he has been a leader in the field of voluntary health leadership.

More than 100 outstanding business, civic and religious leaders of the state, as well as members of the Mississippi Teens Against Polio Cabinet, have been invited to hear his message.

O'Connor will explain the Foundation's broadened concept of medical scientific research, professional education and patient care. He will also detail the new aspects of the Foundation's program involving arthritis and birth defects.

Dr. Felix J. Underwood, former executive officer of the Mississippi State Board of Health, has accepted the state chairmanship of the March of Dimes for the 21st consecutive year. His associate chairman, Owen Cooper of Yazoo City, will serve for his 6th year. In charge of women's activities are Mrs. A. L. Hendrick, Jackson, for North Mississippi, and Mrs. F. L. Dickson, Mt. Olive, for South Mississippi. Tom Coleman, son of Gov. and Mrs. J. P. Coleman, and a freshman at Ole Miss. is the state TAP chairman.

Linda Lackey, Forest, the state Broiler Queen, is the TAP co-chairman.

A New Tuskegee In Next 5 Years!

New Chapel, Pay Hikes In Program

(Pittsburgh Courier Press Service)

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — An ambitious program described by Dr. Luther H. Foster as "The New Tuskegee" has been outlined by the president of famed Tuskegee Institute with a target of five years for completion of the entire program.

Dr. Foster

The New Tuskegee embraces a technical and professional college; a center for research; a community service program through a development officer, soon to be appointed, and a center for cultural development.

Also included in the program is an increase in salaries for faculty members to amount to $210,000 within five years.

Dr. Foster outlined the bold new program in his annual report to the board of trustees.

Student housing needs, increased by increased enrollments, is also a major program, but that phase is already underway. It was launched with a $2 million Federal loan. Five dormitories have been completely renovated and construction begins this year on four additional dormitories.

THE CULTURAL appreciation center—which will cost $2-million—will consist of a group of buildings with facilities for teaching, research and personal experiences in the humanities.

There will be a chapel, a little theatre, a large auditorium, museums and studios, as well. The chapel will replace the school's historic chapel destroyed by fire on Jan. 22, 1957.

A figure of $457,500 annually has been given by Dr. Foster as required to carry out the following major developments: a division of basic studies; a college of arts and sciences (upgrading the natural and social sciences and humanities); an accelerated and broadened research program; a coordinated program for institutional development; training for management; raising faculty salaries, and scholarships for students.

Dr. Foster pointed to a significant increase in enrollment in the electrical engineering option in 1956-57. There were 64 freshmen, including four young ladies, enrolled, the largest first-year class in history.

Archie Alexander, Former Virgin Islands Gov, Dies

Archie Alexander, former governor of the Virgin Islands and civil engineer, died at his home in Des Moines, Iowa, Friday, it has been disclosed.

Appointed by President Eisenhower in 1962 as chief executive of the Virgin Islands, Mr. Alexander lived to become one of the nation's outstanding figures.

His special engineering jobs included the building of the Tuskegee Airfield at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama. He constructed the 14th Street bridge in Washington, D. C., and other top engineering projects in that area.

He was one time of the board of trustees at Tuskegee and Howard University.

He was a graduate of University of Iowa.

It is said that when he entered the University, he was advised not to take the course in engineering. He did and when he graduated the institution is reported to have given him his first top job.

He was a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity and once served as one of the Fraternity's national officers.

He is survived by his wife.

Archie A. Alexander Dies; Governed Virgin Islands

DES MOINES, Jan. 4 (AP)—Archie A. Alexander, sixty-nine former governor of the Virgin Islands and widely known as an architectural engineer and contractor, died at his home here Saturday. In 1928 Mr. Alexander was awarded the Spingarn Medal as the second most successful Negro in American business.

He was one of the early supporters of the Eisenhower-for-President movement in Iowa and in 1954 was appointed by the President as the first Republican governor of the Virgin Islands since establishment of civil government there in 1931.

Mr. Alexander held the post only for a short time, resigning Aug. 18, 1955, because of his health. He became interested in the islands just east of Puerto Rico after his construction firm, Alexander and Repass, bid on several projects there.

His resignation for health reasons came during a House investigation of the handling of a contract for construction of a waterfront roadway on St. Thomas, one of the three Virgin Islands.

A firm composed of some of Mr. Alexander's former business associates was low bidder. Mr. Alexander said there was no improper action on the part of his office and said it was at his instigation that the bid and that of another contractor were rejected.

Mr. Alexander was born at Ottumwa, Iowa, the son of a coachman. He worked his way through the engineering college at the State University of Iowa, where he was a tackle on the football team from 1910 to 1912.

His wife and five sisters survive.

Archie A. Alexander—the man who had done so much to aid and encourage talented, ambitious young men during his lifetime, made provisions in his will for scholarships to be established for engineering students at his alma mater and two leading Negro institutions of higher learning.

When an inventory was filed in Polk County probate court Thursday, April 17 it was disclosed the eminent engineer-contractor stipulated terms under wrich an "Archie A. Alexander Memorial Scholarship" would be set up at the State University of Iowa, where Mr. Alexander received his engineering degree, at Howard Univrsity, where he was a recepient of an honorary doctorate and trustee and at Tuskegee, where he was a trustee for many years.

Net Estate

Estimated value of the former Virgin Islands governor's net estate was set at $140,505.36. However, several years before his death last Jan. 4, Mr. Alexander had made other substantial provisions for his wife. In addition, estimates of other holdings were not definite at time of filing of the will and were listed as "token values. The executors, Mr. Alexander's widow and the Bankers Trust Co., said the total estimate is subject to revision pending further information about these other holdings.

The residuary trust (remainder of estate after payments of gifts and estate expenses) is one of two trusts to be created under Mr. Alexander's will. The other one—to be set up in Mrs. Alexander's name—will be equivalent to half of Mr. Alexander's estate.

Tuskegee

The will also instructed executors to pay the $1,300 balance of a $10,000 gift Mr. Alexander was making to a Tuskegee Institute for an engineering department library.

Gross estate was estimated by the inventory as $225,505.36 with debts of $85,000.

Relatives

Mr. Alexander bequeathed $4,000 to a sister, Mrs. Mary Colleen Jones, of Chicago, Ill., and $1,000 each to four other sisters and a brother, Mrs. Edna B. Pinkhard of New York, N. Y., Mrs. Harriet Vines Hawkins and Mrs. Helen H. Lee, both of Chicago, Mrs. Doris B. Thomas of Philadelphia, Penn., and Harold C. Alexander of St. Louis, Mo.

Secretary

His will also left $1,000 to his secretary for many years, Mrs. Eileen Dickerson Dahltorpe, of 4000 Urbandale Ave.; $500 to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of New York, for a life membership in his memory and 500 shares of stock in Douglas Glen Gardens Corp., which operates an apartment house project in Washington, D. REPRINT FROM CONGRESSMAN FRANCES P. BOLTON'S CHRISTMAS MESSAGE. NOTE: Mrs. Bolton is a trustee of Tuskegee Institute.

Daily Activity Sheet. Mon. 1-6-58 Tuskegee Inst, Ala.

Dear Friends:

Again I greet you at year's end. May the deep joy of the Christmas Season fill your hearts with the sustenance of God's holy and sacred love.

We are privileged to live in an era of great change. I wonder - are we ready to "Sweep up the debris of decaying faiths, sweep down the cobwebs of worn out beliefs and throw our souls wide open to the light of Reason and of Knowledge - Quite unafraid to thrust aside half-truths and grasp the whole?"

Are we of the Free World who know we are God's children, who believe in his infinite wisdom and mercy - are we ready to go through the gate of the year into the unknown darkness beyond, certain that if we but put our hand into the hand of God - "That shall be better than a light and safer than a known way"?

May the Infinite Father of all mankind teach us the way to peace.

Faithfully yours
Frances P. Bolton

MR. WINSTON CRAIG
MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA

There have been some reports that Patterson may also make a clean sweep of the prison system although at the moment Prison Director J. M. McCullough Jr. isn't under the direct control of the governor.

Craig Is A Marked Man

OF ALL THE state officials now living on borrowed time, and from all indications a lot of them are in that position, almost certainly the first one to go will be Winston Craig, the well-paid Negro who has chauffeured Alabama's governors since the days of Frank Dixon.

Craig is the lamest of the lame ducks, and he knows it. Perhaps it should not be surprising, but the demand among Patterson supporters for Craig's dismissal is tremendous. There seems to be a surprisingly large group of Patterson supporters who will hail his administration as a complete success if he does nothing other than oust Craig.

Patterson is well aware of this and he is also well aware of how simple it will be to fire Craig. It's as good as done.

The job will probably go to some member of the Highway Patrol.

There are many reasons for Craig's tremendous unpopularity among the white people. Not the least is the fact that he was (and perhaps still is) a deacon in Dr. Martin Luther King's church. Nothing more need be said.

NEGROES SEEK SCHOOL ENTRY

Shreveport Trade Unit Site of Request

SHREVEPORT, La., Jan. 4 (AP)— Four Negroes seek admission to Shreveport Trade School, one of several state supported trade schools limited by law to white students.

J. W. Moore, director of the school, affirmed today that the four had asked admission, but declined further comment.

The Negroes are Robert Knowles, Ed Samuel Allen, Beverly Cook and G. F. Perrie. When making their application they were accompanied by Revs. L. D. Scott and M. M. Flynn, Negro ministers.

Scott is one of a group of Negroes who filed suit in federal court here last month seeking racial integration of the Shreveport public transit system.

Louisiana's trade schools are set up by the Legislature and operated on legislative funds appropriated each year. There are several such schools for Negroes, including one in Natchitoches, about 60 miles southeast of here.

State Sen. W. M. Rainach, chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, said the Negroes' admission attempt was part of a pattern inspired by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People "to break down the social structure of the South."

Rainach, of Summerfield, said state law requires that Moore must refuse the Negroes admission.

A suit attacking Louisiana segregation laws applying to trade schools, Rainach said, is pending in federal court, but "our segregation laws are still considered legal" until the court's decision.

The suit, he said, was filed Feb. 24, 1956, in the Eastern District of Louisiana by Priscilla Angel and others. It named the State Board of Education and trade schools at Crowley, Natchitoches, Greensburg, Lake Charles and Opelousas as defendants, he said.

Rainach said a ruling in favor of the Negroes in the Eastern District, however, would not apply in the Western District without federal court action.

"By the time that could happen," he said, "we will have had time to pass more laws."

In applying to enter the Shreveport Trade School, the four Negroes sought instruction in sheet metal works, advance radio, dental assistant training and barbering.

11 File Suits For School Entry

NEW ORLEANS, La. — (UPI) — Eleven Louisiana Negroes filed suit in Federal District Court here last week seeking admission to Louisiana State university and the Shreveport Trades School which bar Negro students.

The suits, filed by three adults and eight minors, asked for temporary and permanent injunctions on prevent school policies and a declaratory judgment to define the rights of Negroes to enter the colleges.

The suits allege that each of the plaintiffs is qualified for admission to the schools but that when they attempted to register they were turned back because of their race and color.

Trade School Is Named In Second Suit

Two suits were filed in the United States District Court New Orleans on Tuesday July 29, by Negroes seeking admission to LSU in New Orleans and the Shreveport Trade School in Shreveport, Louisiana. The double barreled action suits were filed by A. P. Tureaud, NAACP attorney representing the students seeking admission.

The suit against LSU in New Orleans was filed on behalf of a score of students who sought admission to the new division of the University situated on Lake Pontchartrain and which is scheduled to open in September. Three of the plaintiffs - Mrs. Jamesetta Henley, Wilson Fleming, Jr., and Louis Radcliff are adults who sued in their own names, the others were minors represented by their parents as their "next friend." In the suit against LSU, the complaint stated that their applications for admission were turned down by W. R. Burleson, Registrar, who stated in his letter to the applicants that "Negroes are not admitted to said school under the laws of the State of Louisiana and the policy of the Board of Supervisors of Louisiana State University an Agricultural and Mechanical College."

In the suit filed by Ed Samuel Allen, Beverley A. Cook, Green L. Pearrie and Dorothy Simpkins, all residents of Shreveport, Louisiana, the plaintiffs alleged that they unsuccessfully applied to the Shreveport Trade School for courses in "Dental Assistant" "Barbering" "Sheet Metal" and other courses offered to the public. They were told by J. W. Moore, the director, that the school did not admit Negroes; that it was for whites only. They were allowed to fill out the customary applications but never heard from them.

Plaintiffs in the above suits seek a declaratory judgment, temporary and permanent injunctions and decrees ordering their admission to LSU and the Shreveport Trade School.

They are represented by A. P. Tureaud, A. M. Trudeau, Jr., and Ernest N. Morial, of New Orleans, Louisiana; U. Simpson Tate, Dallas, Texas and Thurgood Marshall, New York City.

No date has been fixed for the hearings on these cases.

School for girls to be integrated

p. 20140

BALTIMORE

The board of managers at the Montrose School for Girls has agreed to accept the wards at the Barrett School for Girls on a completely integrated basis, the State Department of Public Welfare announced Friday.

The 160-acre property of the Barrett School is scheduled for sale to the nearby Friendship Airport, to provide additional run-way space.

The recent sale of the Harbor Field airport in Dundalk by Friendship officials to the city's Port Authority is expected to hasten the acquisition of the school property.

Thomas J. S. Waxter, director of the Welfare Department, announced that plans were under study for the use of the state's training schools and forestry camps on a racially integrated basis.

Aft. 12-6-58

IN OTHER developments at a board meeting of the Welfare Department Friday, these announcements were made:

1. The Extension of after care service to the two Houses of Good Shepherd, thus providing such service to all children released from training schools in the state;

2. The razing of the old administration building at Boys' Village, leaving only Henson Cottage from the original institution;

3. The consideration of the Naval installation at Piney Point for a possible, additional training school location;

4. Proposed salary increases for the chief of Bureau of Financial Management (city); chief, division of Audits and Accounts (State), and for the assistant directors, city and State.

Tornado Tears Famous School

PINEY WOODS, Miss., Feb. 27 (AP)—Piney Woods Country Life School, one of America's famous experiments in education, lay largely devastated today by a tornado.

Roofs were torn from most of the large buildings at the school for underprivileged Negro children which Dr. Laurence C. Jones founded in 1909.

The twister struck just as students were leaving the dining hall last night. Even before they could run, some were caught by flying boards and pieces of buildings.

Among those hospitalized were Leroy Wynn, 15, with an arm cut, and Annie Rachel Griffin, 16, with back injuries. They were taken to University Hospital in Jackson, 25 miles north of here.

The large two-story main classroom building lost its roof and the second-story rooms stood with their tops open. The equally large dining hall was stripped of shingles, leaving the bare ribs of the roof structure standing like a skeleton.

A deep bite was chewed out of the girl's dormitory, a three-story building. The girls had fled to the basement on the storm's approach.

The exact monetary loss, or what steps can be taken to make repairs, was not known today.

Dr. Jones, the famed "Little Professor of Piney Woods," is 73 years old now but he was on hand late last night to see who was hurt.

Dr. Jones was 24 years old, had $1.65 in cash, a Bible and copies of how-to-farm magazines when he came to Mississippi in 1909 from Iowa.

A University of Iowa graduate, he had resolved to devote his life to the impoverished Negroes of Mississippi's "piney woods."

"Piney woods" was a derisive term then. It meant the almost inaccessible areas where Negroes and poor whites lived an existence of painful poverty.

Distrust of the easy-talking northern Negro was long in giving way. Ed Taylor, a wealthy but stubborn Mississippi Negro, finally gave the land for the school Jones wanted to build. John Webster, a white man who owned a sawmill, stunned the Negroes by giving 10,000 feet of lumber and credit for more. Poor Negroes gave what they had, mainly the use of their hands in erecting the first buildings.

All students work at Piney Woods, and the graduation exercises consist of demonstrations of skills accomplished. The annual ceremonies in the pine-surrounded natural amphitheater attract educators from over the nation.

Delegations from Italy, Africa, Abyssinia and all over the world have trekked to Piney Woods to see first-hand what Dr. Jones built in the Mississippi wilderness.

Nigerian Principal Visits Piney Woods

A Nigerian grammar school principal arrived in Mississippi this week to learn what makes a school like Piney Woods Country Life School for Negroes tick.

Instead he got a first hand report on how Dr. Laurence Jones had kept the school going without aid from state or national government.

Rev. Jonathan O. Adeniyi arrived at the school 25 miles southeast of Jackson three days ago.

By the time he left today he had seen students repair the last of $250,000 damage left by a tornado last winter, and not a dime had been borrowed to do it.

Dr. Jones explained to the Nigerian teacher that most of the work was done by students, even down to the brickmaking. Materials had come from the campus.

Adeniyi is principal of a grammar school at Abeokuta, Nigeria.

He is on a four months tour of schools throughout the U. S. From Mississippi he was to go to Miami and back to Africa late this month.

He said he founded a grammar school in Nigeria 10 years ago, but offered little in the mechanical field except carpentry and agriculture.

If the chance comes to create another school, he said, it'll be built along the same line as Piney Woods. And Adeniyi figures he'll have one advantage.

Dr. Jones' school is financed by individual contributions. The Nigerian school is also private but it gets an annual government grant.
